CUBA, a very large iſland in the Weſt Indies, being 800 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and 70 in its mean breadth from north to ſouth. It was firſt diſcovered by Columbus, in the year 1492, but did not ſubmit to Spain till 1511. In the year 1519, a pilot having diſcovered that the channel between Cuba and the continent of the North was the moſt convenient paſſage for ſhips from Mexico to Europe, the Havannah was built on the north coaſt, as a port to receive them. It was firſt built of wood, and the encreaſing riches attracted the Engliſh and French pirates, who frequently pillaged it. In 1669, it was taken by the freebooter Morgan. In the year 1741, admiral Vernon made an eſtabliſhment on the ſouthern coaſt, and built a fort, which he called Cumberland, but was ſoon after obliged to evacuate it, on account of the intemperance of the climate. In 1761, the Engliſh again took the Havannah, and found immenſe treaſures. A governor, or captain-general, commands in the iſland, who decides all affairs civil and military; an intendant is at the head of the finances. The iſland is divided into 18 juriſdictions, with magiſtrates to each. A chain of mountains extends the whole length of the iſland from eaſt to weſt, and divides it in two. The copper mines furniſh all the Spaniſh colonies with utenſils of that metal; ſmall pieces of gold and ſilver are collected in the ſand of the river, which makes it probable that there are veins of thoſe metals in the mountains. Few countries have better ports; the moſt conſiderable and beſt known are the Havannah and St. Jago. The months of July and Auguſt are rainy; the reſt of the year is hot: the ſoil is equal in fertility to any in America, producing ginger, long pepper, and other ſpices; aloes, maſtic, caſſia fiſtula, manioc, maize, cocoa, &c. Tobacco is one of its principal productions, and is ſuppoſed to be the beſt, or moſt agreeable of any produced in the new world. The cultivation of ſugar has lately been introduced, and in ſome years the inhabitants have raiſed 250,000 quintals. The quantity of coffee is inconſiderable. Among the trees are oaks, firs, palms, cotton trees, ebony, and mahogany. In 1763, ſome emigrants from Florida introduced bees, which multiplied with ſuch great rapidity in the hollows of old trees, that they had ſoon ſufficient for their annual conſumption. In 1770, they had more than enough, and in the year 1777, they exported 715,000 pounds. The horned cattle have increaſed ſo much, that the foreſts are filled with droves of them, which run wild, and are hunted and killed only for their ſkins; ſwine are abundant, both wild and tame. The chief birds are paroquets, turtle doves, and partridges; water-fowl are numerous: on the coaſts are found a great number of turtles. The principal fiſh are mullets and chads. Long. 73. 50. to 85. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 20. to 23. N.

The ſoil is dry, barren, and nitrous, without freſh water, and producing little elſe but ruſhes. Long. 63. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 10. 56. N.

CULM, a town of Poliſh Pruſſia, capital of a palatinate of the ſame name, and the ſee of a biſhop. This town was built in the 13th century, and is ſituated on the Viſtula. It was given by a duke of Maſovia to the knights of the Teutonic order, who made it the ſeat of their tribunal as long as they were poſſeſſed of the territory of Culm, during which time the Culmean law was generally received throughout Pruſſia: from the Teutonic knights it became ſubject to the king of Poland; and has with its territory been ſince annexed to Pruſſia. It is large, without commerce, and but thinly inhabited. It was once Anſeatic, and has till lately retained the privilege of coining money: 18 miles NNW. Thorn. Long. 35. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 20. N.

CULMAIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria and Upper Palatinate: 14 miles E. Bayreuth.

CULMBACH (Marquiſate of), a principality and country of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, bounded on the north by the biſhopric of Bamberg and the country of Reuſs, and on the eaſt by the Vogtland and Bohemia, on the ſouth by the Upper Palatinate, and on the weſt by the biſhopric of Bamberg. It is compoſed of mountains and plains; the ſoil is in ſome places rich and deep, in others ſandy and ſtony, but generally fertile, becauſe well cultivated. Among the mountains is one called Fichtelberg, or Mountain of Pines, from the number of thoſe trees which grow on it, ſuppoſed to be one of the higheſt in Germany. There are mines of vitriol, alum, ſulphur, antimony, copper, iron, and lead: with quarries of ſlate and marble; corn, hemp, and flax abound; nothing is wanting but wine. The greater part of the inhabitants are Lutherans. The principality contains fifty-four towns. The principal of which are Bayreuth, Culmbach, and Hoff. The principal rivers are the Main, the Nabe, the Eger, the Saale, and the Pregnitz. The principality pays 329 florins for the Roman month, and to the chamber of Wetzlar 338 rixdollars fourteen kreutzers. The revenues, managed with economy, may amount to a million of florins. The military eſtabliſhment conſiſts of two regiments of infantry, a troop of horſe-guards, and a ſmall corps of huſſars, beſides 55 companies of militia. It is not unfrequently called The Principality of Bayreuth, from that city.

CULMBACH, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and ſecond town of the principality to which it gaves name: ſituated on the Main: 15 miles NNW. Bayreuth, and 25 NE. Bamberg. Long. 29. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 5. N.

CUMANA, or New Cordova, a town of South America, and capital of New Andaluſia. This town was built in the year 1520, and was firſt called

New Cordova, but is now generally known by the name of Cumana. It contains about 3000 inhabitants, who carry on a conſiderable trade in cocoa, and other productions of the country. The road is commodious for its depth and ſemi-circular form, which defends it from the violence of the winds. Long. 46. 45. W. Ferro. Lat. 10. 12. N.

CUMBACH, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Boleſlaw: 4 miles NW. Gabel.

CUMBERLAND, a county of England, bounded on the north by Scotland and the Solway Frith, 30 miles: on the eaſt by Northumberland and Durham, 58 miles; on the ſouth by Weſtmoreland and Lancaſhire, 69 miles; and on the weſt by the Iriſh Sea, 67 miles; in all 224 miles in circumference, 58 miles in length, and rather above 30 in breadth. The ſurface is diverſified with plains and eminences; open, braky, heathy commons, and irregular incloſures, in ſome parts enriched with riſing plantations; the whole watered by innumerable ſtreams and extenſive lakes, abounding with fiſh of various denominations, and plenty of game. Tho' this county enjoys an extent of 67 miles of ſea-coaſt, yet it cannot boaſt of its navigable rivers; the tide flows not more than two or three miles up the greateſt part of them. Cumberland may be conſidered as forming two different diſtricts, the mountainous, and that which is capable of culture. The mountainous diſtricts are ſeparated into two diviſions, one of which bounds the eaſt ſide of the county, and is the higheſt part of that ridge of mountains that divides the eaſtern and weſtern coaſts of the iſland, from Derbyſhire in England to Linlithgow in Scotland, Croſs-fell, Hartſide-fell, Geltſdale-foreſt, and Spadeadam-waſte, are the names of that portion of the ridge which paſſes through this county. Theſe mountains are compoſed of ſtrata of different kinds of ſtone, and are rich in coal, lime, and lead-ore, but are no way remarkable for any ſtriking irregularities of ſurface. The other diviſion of mountainous diſtricts occupies the ſouth-weſt part of the county, and they are known by the names of Skiddaw, Saddleback, Helvellin, Wreynoſe, Hardknot, Seafell, &c. &c. which are remarkable for their ſteep, broken, rocky ſides, and romantic ſhapes; and are in general one maſs of that kind of ſtone which produces the beautiful blue ſlate, ſo much and ſo deſervedly eſteemed, for covering the roofs of houſes. They are deſtitute of coal, lime, or any metallic ores; but in ſome meaſure repay this defect, by affording ſuch valuable ſlates, and producing that ſingular mineral ſubſtance, black lead, which is found near Keſwick in this county, and, it is ſaid, no where elſe in the ſouthern part of the kingdom. The mountainous diſtricts contain 342,000 acres; improveable common, 150,000: old incloſures, 470,000; lakes and waters, 8000; total quantity of acres in the whole county, 970,000. In a county like Cumberland, enjoying ſuch an extent of ſea-coaſt, and where ſo large a portion is occupied by mountains, and thoſe reckoned amongſt the higheſt in the kingdom, the climate muſt be various. Along the coaſt, and for a conſiderable way up the rivers, the ſnow ſeldom continues above twenty-four hours; but upon the mountains, the ſnow will lie unmelted for ſix or eight months: of courſe, the lower parts of the county are mild and temperate, while on the higher grounds and upon the mountains, and their vicinity, the air is cold and piercing. But the whole is healthy, tho' ſubject to great and frequent falls of rain, particularly in the autumn, which makes their harveſts very precarious and expenſive The ſoil is various. Fertile, rich, ſtrong loams occupy but a ſmall portion of this county. Dry loams, including the various degrees from the rich brown loam to the light ſandy ſoils, are found in a greater proportion than any other; and pear earth is more prevalent in the mountainous diſtricts, particularly thoſe adjoining to Northumberland and Durham: it is alſo found on moors or commons in the lower part of the county. A little below Carliſle, was the famous Picts' wall, built in the year 121, by the emperor Adrian, acroſs the iſland, from the German ocean to the Iriſh ſea; about 100 miles in length, eight feet wide, and twelve feet high, to prevent the incurſions of the Picts and Scots. The principal productions of Cumberland are black lead, coals, copper ore, lapis calaminaris, and ſalmon. Cumberland contains one city, and fifteen towns, viz. Carliſle, the city; Aldſton, Brampton, Cockermouth, Egremont, Heſket, Newmarket, Holm, Ireby, Keſwick, Kirkoſwald, Longtown, Penrith, Ravenglaſs, Whitehaven, Wigton, and Workington. The principal river is the Eden. It ſends ſix members to parliament, viz. two for the county; two for Carliſle; and two for Cockermouth.

CUSCO, a city of South America, in Peru, and ſee of a biſhop ; the moſt ancient, grand, and magnificent of the country ; built by the Incas, on the ſide of ſeveral hills. At firſt, it was peopled by Indians in cabins rather than houſes. As the empire extended, the houſes multiplied, and became more elegant. In the centre was a large level place, from which four grand ſtreets divided. Each province of the empire had its peculiar quarter, in which they muſt reſide during life, without the liberty of changing. They might preſerve their ancient cuſtoms, but were all compelled to worſhip the ſun in a ſumptuous temple, whoſe walls were incruſted with gold and ſilver, and adorned with different figures, and idols of the different nations ſubdued by the Incas. On a hill towards the north are yet ſeen the ruins of a fortreſs built by the Incas, which had a communication, by means of ſubterraneous paſſages, with three forts built in the walls of Cuſco. The wall was of an extraordinary height, and built of ſtone with an aſtoniſhing neatneſs. The Spaniards found the houſes built with ſtone ; and amongſt them a great number of palaces, whoſe principal ornaments were of gold and ſilver, which glittered on the walls. All the deſcendants of the Incas reſided in a particular quarter. Cuſco is at preſent a large city : the houſes are built of ſtone, and covered with red tiles ; the apartments are well diſtributed ; the mouldings of the doors are gilt, and the furniture not leſs magnificent. The cathedral church is large, all of ſtone, and of an elegant and noble architecture. There are nine pariſh churches, and ſeveral convents and hoſpitals. The government is in the hands of a corregidor, who has a council of regidors elected among the nobles of the town ; and from theſe are choſen the alcades. The biſhop has an income of about 4000*l.* a year. The chapter is compoſed of five dignitaries, four canons, and four officers. Cuſco contains about 12,000 Indians, 3000 or 4000 Spaniards, and a great number of ſlaves. The dioceſe is divided into 14 juriſdictions, three of which belong to the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, and 11 to Peru, in the audience of Lima. The juriſdiction of Cuſco extends about 3 or 4 leagues from the walls. The air is temperate, but cold on the hills ; is fertile in grain and fruit, and well watered by the rivers Apurimak and Yukai. Long. 54. 50. W. Ferro. Lat. 13. 30 S.

CUSE, a town of France, in the department of the Doubs, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Baume les Dame : 3 leagues N. Baume.

CUSTRIN, or Kuſtrin, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and new mark of Brandenburg on the Oder. The environs are marſhy, and the road which leads to the circle of Lebus is a fortified dike, with 36 bridges in the ſpace of a league ; the road towards the new mark has ſeven. It is very ſtrong by art and nature, and contains only about 200 houſes within the walls ; but the three fauxbourgs are more extenſive, and handſomer than the town. There are four churches, three magazines, two hoſpitals, &c. It was burned down by the Ruſſians in the year 1739, but not taken. After the fire, it was rebuilt in a more regular form : 48 miles E. Berlin. Long. 32. 27. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 36. N.—In the year 1758, this town was beſieged by the Ruſſians, who threw in a great number of red-hot balls, and ſet fire to it in ſeveral places : great part of the houſes were deſtroyed, or greatly damaged. The king of Pruſſia arrived in the neighbourhood in a few days, when the Ruſſians abandoned their enterpriſe.

CUTCH, a country of Hindooſtan, bounded on the north by ſandy deſerts, which ſeparate from the country of Agimere ; on the eaſt, by Guzerat ; on the ſouth, by an arm of the ſea, called The Gulf of Cutch ; and on the Weſt, by the Sinde. The principal towns are Bocge-booge and Tahej.

CUYCK, a town of Brabant, in a ſmall territory of the ſame name, of which Grave is the capital : 4 miles ESE. Grave, and 12 W. Cleves.

CUYOS, or Cuſto, or Chiquitò, a province of South America, in the government of Buenos Ayres, bounded on the north by Tucuman : on the eaſt by the province of Cordova ; on the ſouth and weſt, by Chili. As far as is known, which is but little, it reſembles Tucuman in its climate and productions.

CUZACATTAN, or St. Salvador, a town of North America, in the province of Guatimala : 165 miles ESE. Guatimala.

CUZEAU, a town of France, in the department of the Saône and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Louhans : 3½ leagues SSE. Louhans.

CYPRUS, an iſland in the Mediterranean Sea, belonging to Turkey in Aſia, ſituated between the coaſt of Syria and that part of Turkey at preſent called Caramania. This country was formerly known by a great many different names. Pliny calls it Acamantis, Ceraſtis, Aſphelia, Amathuſia, Macaria, Cryptos, and Colinia. In other hiſtorians it may be found under the denomination of Chetime, Eroſa, Paphos, and Salamis ; and, in the poets, under that of Cythera. The latter made it the birth-place of Venus, and the abode of the Graces. This iſland contained formerly nine kingdoms, tributary to Egypt, and ſoon after to the Romans. From the emperors of the weſt it paſſed to thoſe of the eaſt; but it was taken from them by the Arabs, under the reign of Heraclius. Iſaac, a prince of the family of the Comenii, who governed it with the title of Duke, being fired with ambition, ſeized on the whole iſland, and eſtabliſhed himſelf ſovereign of it. The weakneſs of the empire for a long time favoured the views of the uſurper; but, in 1191, Richard I. king of England, deprived him of it, together with his life. Being afterwards ſold by this monarch to the Templars, difference of religion cauſed the inhabitants to take up arms againſt their new ſovereigns; and the knights apprehending that they ſhould not be able to keep peaceable poſſeſſion of it, delivered it back to Richard, who renounced it in favour of Guy de Luſignan. In 1460, Charlotte, the laſt heireſs of this family, was expelled from it by James, her natural brother. She married Louis, of Savoy; and on this account the dukes of that country ſtill aſſume the title of King of Cyprus. After the death of James, Catharine Cornaro, his widow, finding herſelf without male children, made over this kingdom, in 1480, to the republic of Venice. But they did not long enjoy their acquiſition. The Turks rendered themſelves maſters of it in 1570, and every thing concurred to ſecure their conqueſt. Ferdinand I. of Medicis, grand duke of Tuſcany, attempted to take Cyprus, and would certainly have ſucceeded, ſay the hiſtorians, had he been provided with better generals. This beautiful iſland is 220 miles in length, 65 in breadth, and about 600 in circumference, comprehending the gulfs. A chain of mountains, the higheſt of which are Olympus, St. Croix, and Buffavent, croſs and divide it from eaſt to weſt. There are few rivers or torrents here, the beds of which, even in winter, are not entirely dry; and this is owing to the great ſcarcity of rain. The heavens, as one may ſay, are of braſs; and hiſtorians aſſure us, that, in the reign of Conſtantine, no rain fell in this iſland for the ſpace of 30 years. It may readily be conceived how much injury a drought of ſo long continuance muſt do to population. There were formerly a great number of cities, of which nothing at preſent remains but the names, and a few ruins. There are ſome even, for the ancient ſituation of which it would be in vain to ſearch. Famaguſta and Nicoſia are the only places of importance; unleſs Larnic, where the European merchants have their factory, may be claſſed in the ſame rank. Beſides theſe, Cyprus contains ſeven citadels, which are commanded by the ſame number of governors. Some authors tell us, that the air of this iſland is bad and unhealthful. Mariti ſays the contrary. The greater part of the inhabitants are Greeks. Beſides a multitude of Armenians, there are here a great many Maronites, whoſe religious practices and ceremonies are not much different from thoſe of the Roman Catholics. The Turks have here a mulla, who is in ſome meaſure the chief of the law; the Greeks, an archbiſhop, and three biſhops; the Armenians, a biſhop; the Maronites, a high prieſt; and the Latins, two rectors, one for the French, and the other for the Italians. Religious toleration in this iſland is extended to all nations. The Greek and Turkiſh languages here equally prevail; and from this mixture there reſults a corruption of the two idioms. The Greek, however, in its words, has preſerved the purity of the ancient dialect; but the pronunciation of it has been totally changed ſince the arrival of the Venetians in the iſland. Commercial people generally ſpeak the Italian language, and a very few of them the French. The Cypriots are, in general, well made. They are tall; have a noble and agreeable air; and in their manner of living they are very ſober and temperate. The women have nothing beautiful but their eyes. All the Greeks are fond of pleaſure; but the Cypriots give themſelves up to it with madneſs: and the vivacity of this paſſion, inſtead of being cooled, appears to revive more and more under the rod of deſpotiſm. The people here clothe themſelves in the ſame manner as the inhabitants of Conſtantinople. When the Turks conquered Cyprus, they reckoned in it, beſides women, children, and old people, 70,000 men ſubject to capitation. The population of Cyprus has ſo much decreaſed, that the inhabitants ſcarcely amount to 40,000. This iſland was formerly one of the richeſt and moſt fertile in the world. It abounded with mines of gold, ſilver, copper, iron, marcaſite, rock alum, and even emeralds; but of theſe ancient productions nothing now remains, except the remembrance, and the names of the places from which they were procured. The preſent government fetters curioſity in this reſpect, and forbids every kind of reſearch. Some centuries ago, a great quantity of oil was made here; but in the time of the Venetians, a ſpirit of ſpeculation aboliſhed that uſeful branch, and the cultivation of olives was abandoned for that of cotton. Saffron, rhubarb, and other valuable productions, are at preſent totally neglected. Deer, roebucks, aſſes, wild bears, and a great number of the moſt beautiful pheaſants, once enlivened the plains of Cyprus; but they are now all deſtroyed: and it would ſeem as if theſe animals had refuſed to embelliſh a country which is no longer the ſeat of liberty. The principal productions of the iſland at preſent are ſilk, cotton, wool, nutmegs, wines, turpentine, kermes, opium, wheat, barley, coloquintida, pitch, tar, glaſſwort, ſalt, St. John's bread, timber for building, umbre, and green earth. All theſe productions form ſo many branches of commerce which the iſland carries on with Europe, and of which we ſhall ſpeak in another place. This iſland formerly was very abundant in oil, and exported conſiderable quantities of it every year to foreign countries; but olives have decreaſed ſo much for ſome time paſt, that it is now found neceſſary to import it. It abounded alſo with jujebs, from the ſeeds of which the inhabitants extracted a kind of oil. The ſame thing is ſtill done in Natolia; and this oil is one of the moſt lucrative branches of its trade with the coaſt of Syria. It is, above all, exceedingly uſeful in thoſe years when olives are ſcarce. Oil of glaſſwort was alſo a great reſource, when that of olives, or the ſeeds of the jubeb, could not ſupply enough for the numerous inhabitants of the iſland. The ſoil here produces pulſe, and all kinds of wild herbs, a knowledge of which would be a valuable acquiſition to botany; but there are few trees, and, conſequently, few fruits. Nature, however, to make up for this loſs, has been exceedingly laviſh in flowers; and the moſt beautiful and delicate plants of Italy, France, and Holland, may be eaſily naturalized. Hyacinths, anemonies, ranunculuſes, and narciſſuſſes, both ſingle and double, which require ſo much care in Europe, thrive even upon the mountains without cultivation, and render the beautiful plains of this iſland like an immenſe parterre. There would be even ſtill more of them, did not the Cypriots rob the vallies, in order to ornament their gardens. Oranges of an exquiſite taſte, and delicious flavour, are very common here. For want of hands, great part of this iſland ſtill remains uncultivated, and produces nothing but thyme and other odoriferous herbs. In the ſide of a mountain near Paphos, there is a cavern, which produces the moſt beautiful rock cryſtal. On account of its brilliancy, it has been called the Paphian Diamond: it is cut and poliſhed in the ſame manner as other precious ſtones. People are forbidden, under the ſevereſt puniſhment, to carry away the ſmalleſt bit of it; and the mountain is ſurrounded with guards; but their fidelity is not proof againſt the moſt trifling preſent. The like prohibition has been made reſpecting the ſtone amianthus or aſbeſtos, of which there is a quarry near the village of Paleandros. Incombuſtible cloth, it is ſaid, has been made of it: and fire, inſtead of changing, increaſes its whiteneſs. There are found here alſo red jaſper, agates, and three different kinds of ſtone. The hills neareſt to Larne conſiſt wholly of talc, which ſerves for the compoſition of that plaſter uſed in all the houſes of the country. No wild animals are ſeen here but foxes and hares: the odoriferous herbs on which the latter feed, give their fleſh an excellent taſte, and a moſt agreeable flavour. The moſt common of the winged tribe are rails, partridges, ſnipes, quails, and thruſhes. Of water-fowl there is great abundance. The becaficos and ortolans are remarkably fat; and ſo numerous, that the peaſants think they make a good market when they can diſpoſe of them at the rate of a penny for a bunch, or a dozen. Among the numerous animals here, there is a kind of ſerpent, the Greek name of which ſignifies the deaf ſnake: its bite is mortal; its body is about two feet in length, and an inch in diameter; its colour is black and yellow; and it has two ſmall horns on its head. The Greeks have named it very improperly; for it is by no means deaf. It generally frequents corn-fields; and the reapers, beſides wearing buſkins, fix ſmall bells to their ſcythes, in order to frighten it away. The tarantula of Cyprus is a kind of ſpider, of a brown colour inclining to black, and covered with long hair: its bite is not mortal; but it is, nevertheleſs, dangerous, and often occaſions excruciating pain, accompanied with a fever. That of the galley is, however, incurable. This is a thin flat animal, about a foot and a half long; of a yellow colour, and furniſhed with a multitude of legs, which it moves uniformly, like the oars of a galley: hence it has acquired its name. There is here alſo a black ſerpent, about a yard, or a yard and a half long; but it is not venomous: people take it in their hands without danger; and having ſtripped off its ſkin, broil the fleſh, which is ſaid to be extremely well taſted. The oxen here are lean, and of a ſmall ſize. The Greeks never eat beef; for they hold it as a maxim, that the animal which tills the ground, which is the ſervant of man, and the companion of his labours, ought not to be uſed for food. The mutton is juicy and tender. No arts are cultivated there but ſuch as are abſolutely neceſſary. The wants of the inhabitants ſupport alſo a few manufactures, the produce of which is, however, ſcarcely ſufficient for their conſumption. Every thing here has been ſubjected to the yoke of deſpotiſm.

DAHOMEY, or Dauma, a country of Africa, on the Slave Coaſt, ſituated about 60 or 70 miles from the Atlantic ; called alſo Fouin. Dahomy, as known at preſent, is ſuppoſed to reach from the ſea coaſt about 150 or 200 miles inland, though no European has penetrated above half that diſtance. The capital, Abomey, lies in about 9 degrees and 50 minutes of north latitude, and between the third and fourth degree of eaſt longitude, reckoned from the meridian of Greenwich. The ſoil is a deep, rich clay, of a reddiſh colour, with a little ſand on the ſurface, except about Calmina, where it is more light and gravelly : but there is not to be found a ſtone ſo big as an egg in the country, ſo far as it has been viſited by the Europeans ; of farinaceous vegetables, the country yields a plentiful ſupply, proportionable to the quantity of culture ; namely maize, millet, or Guinea-corn of different ſorts ; a kind of peas, or rather kidney beans, called callavances ; and alſo a ſpecies of beans, called ground-beans. The Dahomans likewiſe cultivate yams, potatoes of two ſorts, the caſſada, or manioka, the plantain, and the banana. Pine-apples, melons, oranges, limes, guavas, and other tropical fruits, alſo abound in this fertile country. Nor is it deſtitute of productions adapted for commerce and manufacture ; ſuch as indigo, cotton, the ſugar-cane, tobacco, palm oil, together with a variety of ſpices, particularly a ſpecies of pepper, very ſimilar in flavour, and indeed ſcarcely diſtinguiſhable from the black pepper of the Eaſt Indies. A very curious fruit is produced in Dahomy, as well as in ſome other parts of Africa, which reſembles a ſmall olive in every reſpect but the colour ; being of a duſky reddiſh hue, changing at the end next the ſtalk to a faint yellow ; the pulp is firm, and almoſt inſipid ; the ſtone is hard like that of the olive. After having chewed one or more of ſuch berries, and ſpit out or ſwallowed the pulp at pleaſure, a glaſs of vinegar will taſte, to the perſon trying the experiment, like ſweet wine ; a lime will ſeem to have the flavour of a very ripe China orange ; and the ſame change is produced in other acids, without effervescence, or any ſenſible motion. The Dahomans, like the other inhabitants of tropical climates, plant twice a year, viz. at the vernal and autumnal equinoxes ; after which the periodical rains prevail. The language is that which the Portugueſe call Lingua Geral, or General Tongue, and is ſpoken not only in Dahomy Proper, but in Whydah, and the other dependent ſtates ; and likewiſe in Mahee, and ſeveral neighbouring places. With reſpect to the Dahoman religion, it conſiſts of a jumble of ſuperſtitious ceremonies, of which it is impoſſible to convey any ſatisfactory idea. The government is perhaps the moſt perfect deſpotiſm on the earth. The policy of the country admits of no intermediate degree of ſubordination between king and ſlave, at leaſt in the royal preſence, where the prime miniſter is obliged to proſtrate himſelf with as much abject ſubmiſſion as the meaneſt ſubject ; all acknowledging the right of the ſovereign at pleaſure. A miniſter of ſtate, on his entrance, crawls towards the apartment of audience on his hands and knees, till he arrives in the royal preſence, where he lays himſelf flat on his belly, rubbing his head in the duſt, and uttering the moſt humiliating expreſſions. Being deſired to advance, he receives the king's commands, or communicates any particular buſineſs, ſtill continuing in a recumbent poſture ; for no perſon is permitted to ſit, even on the floor, in the royal preſence, except the women : and even they muſt kiſs the earth when they receive or deliver the king's meſſage. The king of Dahomy maintains a conſiderable ſtanding army, commanded by an agaow, or general, with ſeveral other ſubordinate military officers, who muſt hold themſelves in readineſs to take the field upon all occaſions, at the command of the ſovereign. The payment of theſe troops chiefly depends on the ſucceſs of the expeditions in which they are engaged. On extraordinary occaſions, all the males able to bear arms are obliged to repair to the general's ſtandard ; every caboceer marching at the head of his own people. Sometimes the king takes the field at the head of his troops ; and on very great emergencies, at the head of his women. Within the walls of the different royal palaces in Dahomy, are immured not leſs than 3000 women ; ſeveral hundreds of theſe are trained to arms, under a female general, and ſubordinate officers, appointed by the king, in the ſame manner as thoſe under the agaow. Theſe warriors are regularly exerciſed, and go through their evolutions with as much expertneſs as the male ſoldiers. They have their large umbrellas, their flags, their drums, trumpets, flutes, and other muſical inſtruments. In ſhort, the ſingularity of this inſtitution never fails to attract the particular attention of the Europeans, when, among other uncommon exhibitions, they are preſented with the unuſual ſpectacle of a review of female troops. The dreſs of the men in Dahomy conſiſts of a pair of ſtriped or white cotton drawers, of the manufacture of the country, over which they wear a large ſquare cloth of the ſame, or of European manufacture. This cloth is about the ſize of a common counterpane, for the middling claſs, but much larger for the grandees. It is wrapped about the loins, and tied on the left ſide by two of the corners, the others hanging down, and ſometimes trailing on the ground. A piece of ſilk, or velvet, of 16 or 18 yards makes a cloth for a grandee. The head is uſually covered with a beaver or felt hat, according to the quality of the wearer. The king, as well as ſome of his miniſters, often wears a gold or ſilver laced hat and feather. The arms and upper part of the body remain naked, except when the party travels or performs ſome piece of work, when the large cloth is laid aſide, and the body is covered with a ſort of frock or tunic without ſleeves. The feet are always bare, none but the ſovereign being permitted to wear ſandals. The dreſs of the women, though ſimple, conſiſts of a greater number of articles than that of the men. They uſe ſeveral cloths and handkerchiefs ; ſome to wrap round the loins, and others to cover occaſionally the breaſts and upper part of the body. The neck, arms, and ancles are adorned with beads and chowries ; and rings of ſilver, or baſer metal, encircle the fingers. The ears are pierced ſo as to admit the little finger, and a coral bead of that ſize ſtuck into each, if the party be able to afford it ; otherwiſe a portion of red ſealing-wax, or a piece of oyſter-ſhell poliſhed, is applied in the ſame manner. Girls, before the age of puberty, wear nothing but a ſtring of beads or ſhells round the loins, and young women uſually expoſe the breaſts to view. The general character of the Dahomans is marked by a mixture of ferocity and politeneſs. The former appears in the treatment of their enemies ; the latter they poſſeſs far above the African nations with whom we have hitherto had any intercourſe ; this being the country where ſtrangers are leaſt expoſed to inſults, and where it is eaſy to reſide in ſecurity and tranquillity.

DALMATIA, a country of Europe, bounded on the north by Boſnia and Croatia, on the eaſt by Servia, and on the ſouth and weſt by the Adriatic, or Gulf of Venice. It is reckoned to contain 477,000 ſquare miles, and in the year 1783, 367,000 inhabitants. Dalmatia, or, as it is written in old coins and inſcriptions, Delmatia, takes its name from its ancient capital Delmium, or Delminium, which the Romans took and deſtroyed in the 597th year from the building of the city. If the Romans brought it under the yoke, Dalmatia ſhook it off no leſs than five times, and for the ſpace of 220 years, to Auguſtus's reign, gave them a great deal of trouble. On the diviſion of the provinces between Auguſtus and the Senate, Dalmatia fell to the ſenate as one of the proconſular provinces; but they voluntarily ceded it to the emperor, who appointed a queſtor over it. At the demiſe of Conſtantine the Great, it was reckoned among the weſtern parts of Illyricum. It ſuffered extremely by the inroads of the northern Barbarians, and the Goths reduced it in their way to Italy. After this, Juſtinian, emperor of the Eaſt, conquered Italy and alſo Dalmatia, but, in the year 1548, the Sclavi entered it, and, about the end of Heraclius's reign, eſtabliſhed themſelves in it. The country had then its particular kings, of which Zlodomir, or Zaromyr, the laſt, dying without iſſue, left the kingdom to his conſort, who bequeathed it to her brother, Saint Ladiſlaus, king of Hungary; ever ſince which it has been dependent upon that crown: but the Venetians are maſters of the maritime parts. In the wars which the kings of Hungary had, both with the Venetians and the turbulent Dalmatians, they were for a conſiderable time ſucceſsful; but, in the 15th century, the Venetians reduced the whole kingdom of Dalmatia, though they have ſince been diſpoſſeſſed by the Turks of a conſiderable part. At preſent the Hungarians, Venetians, Turks, and Raguſans, ſhare it amongſt them. The Dalmatians uſe the Sclavonian language and cuſtoms, and profeſs the Roman Catholic religion. The rivers of Dalmatia have no long courſe, but are moſtly navigable. The country is as it were ſtrewed with mountains, but theſe not unfruitful; olives, vines, myrtles, and a great variety of palatable and wholeſome vegetables, growing upon them, beſides treaſures of gold and ſilver ore within them. It has alſo many fertile plains; and beſides a ſufficiency of horned cattle, feeds large numbers of ſheep. The air is temperate and pure. Hungarian Dalmatia lies in the upper part of the Adriatic Sea, containing part of the ancient Liburnia, and is more generally called Morlachia. The part poſſeſſed by the Venetians lies to the ſouth-eaſt of Hungarian Dalmatia, and abounds in ancient caſtles and fortreſſes. The inhabitants are warlike, intrepid ſoldiers, and excellent ſeamen: the nobility and people well attached to the republic; mildneſs makes them faithful ſubjects to Venice: their privileges are reſpected, and it would be dangerous to offend them. The principal towns are, Zara, Sebenico, Trau, Spalatro, Narenta, and Almiſſa. Beſides what the Venetians poſſeſs on the continent, ſeveral iſlands on the Adriatic belong to them, which are conſidered as a part of Dalmatia. Turkiſh Dalmatia lies eaſt of Venetian Dalmatia: the principal towns are Scardona, Clinovo, andHerzegowina. The republic of Raguſa forms the other part of Dalmatia.

DAMASCUS, a celebrated city of Syria, about 50 miles from the ſea, from which it is ſeparated by a long chain of mountains; but by whom or when founded is unknown. That it exiſted in the time of Abraham, is evident from the ſacred writings. In the time of David, it was the capital of a kingdom which David conquered and added to his own dominions. During the reign of the ſucceeding kings of Iſrael and Judah, it was ſometimes ſubject to them, and at other times independent, or governed by kings of their own, who called themſelves kings of Syria and Damaſcus. In the year of the world 3939, it came under the power of the Romans, with whom it continued till it fell into the hands of the Arabians. Obodas, father of Aretas, king of Arabia, was maſter of Damaſcus, under Auguſtus; and Aretas was governor of Damaſcus when St. Paul was there. Damaſcus was a long time under the dominion of the emperors, and was one of the five arſenals which they had in the eaſt. About the middle of the 17th century, in the reign of Heraclius, the Saracens became maſters of it; they were driven out by the Turks, whoſe general became Soudan, or Sultan, of Damaſcus. Other Turks, commanded by Ottoman Sultans, deſtroyed the kingdom of Damaſcus. Tamerlane, having defeated the Sultan, Bajazet II. beſieged and took Damaſcus, and put the inhabitants to the ſword: next the Egyptian Mamelukes got poſſeſſion of it, and kept it till the year 1516, when Selim, emperor of the Turks, conquered both it and all Syria, ſince which time it has remained with the Turks. Damaſcus is now the capital of a pachalic. The Arabs call it El Sham. It is ſituated in a vaſt plain, open to the ſouth and eaſt, and ſhut in toward the weſt and north by mountains, which limit the view at no great diſtance; but in return, a number of rivulets ariſe from theſe mountains, which render the territory of Damaſcus the beſt watered and moſt delicious province of all Syria; the Arabs ſpeak of it with enthuſiaſm, and think they can never ſufficiently extol the freſhneſs and verdure of its orchards; the abundance and variety of its fruits; its numerous ſtreams; and the clearneſs of its rills and fountains. No city affords ſo many canals and fountains; each houſe has one; and all theſe waters are furniſhed by three rivulets, or branches of the ſame river, which, after fertilizing the gardens for a courſe of three leagues, flow into a hollow of the deſert to the ſouth-eaſt, where they form a moraſs called Bebairat el Mardj, or the Lake of the Meadow. With ſuch a ſituation, it cannot be diſputed that Damaſcus is one of the moſt agreeable cities in Turkey; but it is ſtill deficient in point of ſalubrity. The inhabitants complain, with reaſon, that the white waters of the Barrada are cold and hard, and it is obſerved, that the natives are ſubject to obſtructions; that the whiteneſs of their ſkin is rather the paleneſs of ſickneſs than the colour of health; and that the too great uſe of fruit, particularly of apricots, occaſions there, every ſummer and autumn, intermittent fevers and dyſenteries. Damaſcus is much longer than it is broad. M. Niebuhr, who has given a plan of it, makes it 3250 toiſes, or ſomething leſs than a league and a half in circumference, and probably contains 80,000 inhabitants. The greater part of theſe are Arabs and Turks; the number of Chriſtians are eſtimated at above 15,000. Damaſcus is the rendezvous for all the pilgrims who go to Mecca from the north of Aſia, as Cairo is for thoſe from Africa. Their number every year amounts to from 30 to 50,000; many of them repair here four months before the time, but the greateſt number only at the end of the Ramadan. Damaſcus then reſembles an immenſe fair, nothing is to be ſeen but ſtrangers from all parts of Turkey, and even Perſia; and every place is full of camels, horſes, mules, and merchandize. By means of this caravan, Damaſcus is become the centre of a very extenſive commerce. By Aleppo, the merchants of this city correſpond with Armenia, Natolia, Diarbekar, and even with Perſia. They ſend caravans to Cairo, which, following a route frequented in the time of the patriarchs, take their courſe by Djeſr-yakoub, Tabaria, Nablous, and Gaza. In return, they receive the merchandize of Conſtantinople and Europe by way of Saide and Barout. The home conſumption is balanced by ſilk and cotton ſtuffs, which are manufactured here in great quantities, and are very well made; by the dried fruits of their own growth, and ſweetmeats, cakes of roſes, apricots, and peaches, of which Turkey conſumes to the amount of about 40,000 pounds. The remainder paid for by the courſe of exchange, occaſions a conſiderable circulation of money in cuſtom-houſe duties, and the commiſſion of the merchants. This commerce has exiſted in theſe countries from the moſt remote antiquity. It has flowed through different channels, according to the changes of the government, and other circumſtances; but it has every where left very apparent traces of the opulence it produced. The pachalic of Damaſcus comprehends nearly the whole eaſtern part of Syria. In this vaſt extent of country, the ſoil and its productions are very various; but the plains of the Hauran, and thoſe on the banks of the Orontes, are the moſt fertile: they produce wheat, barley, doura, ſeſamum, and cotton. Some parts are of a gravelly and poor ſoil, better adapted to fruits and tobacco than any thing elſe. All the mountains are appropriated to olive, mulberry, and fruit trees, and in ſome places to vines, from which the Greeks make wine, and the Mahometans dried raiſins. The pacha enjoys all the privileges of his poſt, which are more conſiderable than thoſe of any other pachalic; for, beſides the farm of all the cuſtoms and impoſts, and an abſolute authority, he is alſo conductor of the ſacred caravan of Mecca, under the highly reſpected title of Emir Hadj. The Mahometans conſider this office as ſo important, and entitled to ſuch reverence, that the perſon of a pacha who acquits himſelf well of it, becomes inviolable even by the ſultan: it is no longer permitted to ſhed his blood. But the divan has invented a method of ſatisfying its vengeance on thoſe who are protected by this privilege, without departing from the literal expreſſion of the law, by ordering them to be pounded in a mortar, or ſmothered in a ſack, of which there have been various inſtances: 270 miles SSW. Diarbek, and 130 NNE. Jeruſalem.

DAMASENSA, a town of Africa, in the country of Jagra, ſituated on a river of the ſame name, which runs into the river Gambia.

DAMIETTA, or Damiat, a ſea-port town of Egypt, firſt built at the eaſtern mouth of the Nile, and called Thamiatis under the government of the Lower Empire. It daily increaſed as Peluſium declined, and was a ſecond time taken by the emperors of Conſtantinople about the year 238 of the Hegira. But the importance of a maritime town ſo favourably ſituated, was at length ſeen; and ſix years after, the caliph Elmetouakkel ſurrounded it with ſtrong walls, which, however, did not impede the valiant Roger, king of Sicily, from taking it in the year 550 of the Hegira. Salah Eddin, who began to reign over Egypt about this time, did not let him long enjoy his conqueſt, but drove the Europeans from Damietta, who, 15 years after, returned again to beſiege it, but their efforts were ineffectual. Again the cruſaders attacked it with powerful forces, under the reign of El Addel, in the year 615 of the Hegira. After many turns of fortune, bloody battles, and a ſiege of ſeventeen months, the Chriſtian princes took Damietta by aſſault, but did not long enjoy the fruit of all the blood they had ſpilt, and an armament which had coſt ſums ſo immenſe. Surrounded near the canal of Achmoun, by the waters of the Nile, and the Egyptian army, they bought their lives and liberty by reſtoring their conqueſt. Thirty-one years after their defeat, Louis IX. took Damietta, without ſtriking a blow. The daring valour of a king, who threw himſelf armed into the water to march againſt an enemy entrenched on ſhore, and the impetuoſity with which he attacked them, ſpread terror through their army, which, flying, cowardly abandoned a fortreſs amply ſtored, and capable of long reſiſtance. The Arabs, ſoon after, recovered it, but, weary of defending a place, which brought upon them the moſt warlike nations of Europe, they wholly eraſed and rebuilt it higher up the country. Damietta is larger and not leſs agreeable than Roſetta; it forms a ſemicircle, on the eaſtern ſhore of the Nile, two leagues and a half from its mouth. It contains about eighty thouſand inhabitants, and has ſeveral ſquares: bazars filled with merchandize, okals, or khans, under the porticos of which are Indian ſtuffs, ſilks from Mount Lebanon, ſal ammoniac, and quantities of rice, beſpeak it a commercial place. The houſes, eſpecially near the river, are very high; moſt of them have pleaſant ſaloons built on the terraces, from which charming places, open to every wind, there is a view of the grand lake lying on the other ſide, and of the Nile, which traverſes a rich country between them both. Various grand moſques, with high minarets, ornament the city. The public baths, faced with marble, are ſimilar to thoſe of Grand Cairo. Multitudes of boats and ſmall veſſels inceſſantly fill the port of Damietta. Some, named ſherm, ſerve to load and unload the ſhips that anchor in the road; others are coaſting pilot boats. There is a great trade between this city and Syria, Cyprus, and Marſeilles. The rice mezelaoui, the fineſt, of Egypt, is cultivated in the neighbouring plains, and its annual exportation amounts to between 2 and 300,000 pounds. There are likewiſe cloths, ſal ammoniac, wheat, &c. Laws, ruinous to the country, prohibit the exportation of the latter; but they are evaded, and it is paſſed as rice. The Chriſtians of Aleppo and Damaſcus, for many ages eſtabliſhed here, carry on the principal trade; they are ſuffered to grow rich by Turkiſh indolence, which contents itſelf with occaſional extortions. Exportation of rice is forbidden, but by arrangements advantageous to the receiver of the cuſtoms, the people of Provence annually load ſeveral ſhips. The thing moſt diſadvantageous to the trade of Damietta is its defective harbour, the road where veſſels lie being totally expoſed, every gale that riſes the captains are obliged to ſlip their cables, and take refuge at Cyprus, or keep the open ſea. By cutting a canal of half a league only, it would be eaſy to give ſhips free entrance into the Nile, which is deep, and this ſmall expence would render Damietta a fine harbour: but deſpotiſm, inſenſible to the good of nations, always marches towards deſtruction, and has neither will nor power to create. The ſlip of land where Damietta is built, ſhut in on one ſide by the river, and on the other by the lake Menzala, is only from two to ſix miles wide eaſt and weſt. Rivulets interſect it in every direction, and render it the moſt fruitful part of Egypt. The rice in common yields eighty buſhels for one, and other products are in the ſame proportion: 84 miles NNE. Cairo. Long. 49. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 31. 22. N.

DAMINS, a town of Swiſſerland, in the Grey League: 10 miles NNE. Ilantz.

DAMME, a town of the United Dutch States, in Groningen, ſituated in the Ommelends, on the river Damſter, the capital of a country called Fivelingo, which comprehend forty-five villages. Damme has a communication with Groningen by means of a canal. It was anciently fortified before the troops of Charles V. took it by aſſault in 1536, when under the dominion of the duke of Gueldres. It was diſmantled in 1539, by order of George comte de Tautembourg. Although it be unfortified, it enjoys the privileges of a city, and has a voice among the ſtates in Groningen. It ſuffered much in the religious wars of the 16th century, as well as by inundations ſome years ſince: 14 miles NE. Groningen, and 2 W. Delfzyl.

DAMME, a town of Flanders, ſituated on the canal between Bruges and Sluys : takes its name from the ſtrong dyke made here to prevent the incroachments of the ſea, ſometimes called Hondts-Damme, that is the Dog's Dike, perhaps from the dog borne in the arms of the place. It was firſt ſurrounded with walls in 1238, and has been ſince regularly fortified with ſeven baſtions. It forms a citadel to the city of Bruges, and could at any time inundate the country, if that city was beſieged. In the year 1213, a ſquadron of French ſhips came to attack it as a prelude to Ghent, but were defeated by the Engliſh. In the year 1384, it ſuſtained a long ſiege againſt an army of 80,000 men, commanded by Charles VI. king of France, and ſurrendered only for want of freſh water. It is in the Franc of Bruges, and enjoys the ſame privileges as Oſtend. It was taken by the duke of Marlborough, in 1706, and ceded to the Dutch by the peace of Utrecht : 3 miles NNE. Bruges, and 6 SSW. Sluys.

DANTZICK, or Dantzig, a ſea-port town of Pruſſia, ſituated in the province of Pomerelia, on the Viſtula, about 4 miles from the Baltic. Two ſmall rivers, called the Radaune and the Motlau, paſs through the city : theſe rivers unite below the town, and run together into the Viſtula. It is large and populous, and properly conſiſts of two parts, the Old Town and New Town, with their ſuburbs. It has a very good harbour, and wants nothing but depth. Here are twelve Lutheran churches, two for Calviniſts, and one for Roman Catholics. It was anciently the principal of the Hanſe towns, being one of the firſt that entered into that aſſociation. The German is almoſt the only language ſpoken here : the Poliſh being but little uſed by the inhabitants. Dantzick, ſo early as the year 997, was a large commercial town. The New Town was founded by the Teutonic knights in the year 1311, and was firſt ſurrounded with a wall and moat in the year 1343. The inhabitants refuſing to do homage to Stephen, king of Poland, without a previous confirmation of their rights and privileges ; the city was put under the ban, and beſieged by that prince. However, matters were adjuſted, and on a public acknowledgment of their error, and paying a large fine to the king, he received the city into favour, confirmed its privileges, and granted the inhabitants the free exerciſe of their religion. In 1734, Staniſlaus, king of Poland, took refuge in this city ; but this occaſioned a bombardment from the Saxons and Ruſſians. At length when there were no hopes of relief from the French by ſea, and king Staniſlaus had found a way to make his eſcape, Dantzick ſubmitted to Auguſtus III. elector of Saxony, as its ſovereign. In the year 1752, 1288 Poliſh veſſels, ſmall and great, from the Viſtula, and 1014 ſhips from the ſea, arrived in this port ; and 58,060 laſts and buſhels of corn were brought into this city for exportation ; other exports conſiſt of tallow, leather, wool, wax, butter, ſkins, &c.. Articles of importation are wine, ſpices, cloth, ſilk and woollen ſtuffs, herrings, ſalt, iron, lead, drugs, &c. The king of Pruſſia, who had before ſeized on the greater part of the province, in the year 1793, added the remainder with the city of Dantzick, to his dominions : 68 miles WSW. Konigſberg. Long. 18. 50. E. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 24. N.

DARIEN (Gulf of), a large river or arm of the ſea, at the mouth of a river of that name; not deep in proportion to its breadth, but growing deeper farther in. It empties itſelf into the Spaniſh Main. Long. 59. 35. W. Ferro. Lat. 8. 40. N.

DARIEN (Iſthmus of), a country of South America, and the northern part of Terra Firma, extending in length about 120 leagues, in the form of a half moon, and from 16 to 45 in breadth; bounded on the north by the Spaniſh Main, on the eaſt by the province of Carthagena, on the ſouth by the country of Popayan and the Pacific Ocean, and on the weſt by the Pacific Ocean and the province of Veragua. The land is almoſt every where of an unequal ſurface, diſtinguiſhed by hills and vallies of great variety for height, depth, and extent. The vallies are generally watered with rivers, brooks, and ſprings, with which the country very much abounds. They fall ſome into the North, others into the South Sea, and moſt of them take their riſe from a ridge, or chain of higher hills than the reſt, running the length of the iſthmus, and in a manner parallel to the ſhore. This is of an unequal breadth, and curves as the iſthmus itſelf does. It is moſtly neareſt the North Sea, ſeldom above 10 or 15 miles diſtant from it. Mr. Wafer ſays, he had always a fair view of the North Sea from thence; but the South Sea he could not ſee from any part of the ridge, by reaſon that though here and there are plains and vallies of a conſiderable extent, and ſome open places, yet they lie intermixed with conſiderable hills, and thoſe ſo clothed with tall woods, that they interrupt the proſpect very much. On the north ſide of the main ridge, are either no hills at all, or ſuch as are rather gentle declivities, or gradual ſubſidings of the ridge, than hills diſtinct from it. This ſide of the country is every were ſo covered with woods, that it may be called one continued foreſt. Some of the rivers which water this country are indifferently large, though few of them navigable, as having bars and ſhoals at their mouth. On the north coaſt, the rivers are for the moſt part very ſmall: for, riſing generally from the main ridge, which lies near the ſhore, their courſe is very ſhort. The river of Darien is, indeed, very large; but the depth at the entrance is not anſwerable to the wideneſs of its mouth, though farther in it is deep enough. But from thence to Chagre, the whole length of this coaſt the rivers are little better than brooks. This province is of great importance to the Spaniards, and the ſcene of more actions than any in America. From its ſituation both on the North and South Seas, the gold ſands of its rivers, and the treaſures of Peru, which are brought hither and imported into Old Spain, have induced ſeveral adventurers to make attempts on Panama, Porto Bello, &c. The country is extremely hot, and the low lands are overflown with continual rains. The mountains here are ſo difficult of acceſs, that it takes up ſeveral days to croſs them, though the diſtance be inconſiderable. From the tops of ſome of theſe the Spaniards firſt diſcovered the South, or great Pacific Ocean, in the year 1513, and called it the South Sea, becauſe they croſſed the iſthmus from the North Sea; though, in fact, the Pacific Ocean lies weſt of the main land of America. The principal towns of Darien are Panama and Porto Bello.

DARKEHMEN, a town of Pruſſia: 50 miles ESE. Konigſberg.

DARKING, or Dorking, a town of England, in the county of Surry, ſituated at the angle of two vallies, ſurrounded by hills. The town was deſtroyed by the Danes. The church is collegiate. The market, particularly celebrated for the quantity of poultry, is kept on Thurſday. The principal trade is mealing: the cuſtom of borough Engliſh prevails in this manor; that is, the youngeſt ſon is heir to the copyhold eſtate: 11 miles E. Guildford, and 24 SSW. London.

Ferro. Lat. 46. 40. N.

DAUPHIN, an iſland in the north part of the Gulf of Mexico, at the mouth of the river Mobile, about five leagues long, but narrow ; very barren ; according to the account given by voyagers, not a tree to be ſeen in one half the iſland, and the other not much better. The French attempted a ſettlement here, and the cultivation of tobacco, which was ſaid to be equal to that of Virginia. In the year 1719, the Spaniards made a fruitleſs attempt to take it, during the ſpace of four days. Long. 88. 10. W. Greenwich. Lat. 30. 15. N.

DAUPHIN, a county of Pennſylvania, in which are found mines of iron ore. The total number of inhabitants, in the year 1790, was 18,177. Hariſburg is the capital.

DAUPHINY, before the revolution, a country of France, which once made part of the kingdom of Burgundy, and after being ſubject to many princes, was ceded, in the year 1343, by the dauphin Humbert, to the younger ſon of Philip de Valois, king of France ; obliging him and his ſucceſſors to bear the name and arms quartered with thoſe of France : Dauphiny thus became an appanage of France, and the eldeſt prince always took the title of Dauphin. It was not incorporated, but formed a ſeparate ſtate : and the king took the title of the Dauphin of the Viennois. The country is fertile in ſome places, producing corn, wine, olives, hemp, barley, oats, ſalt, wood, copperas, ſilk, varniſh, cryſtal, iron, copper, and lead ; but two-thirds of the country are mountainous and barren. It now forms the departments of the Iſere, the Drôme, and Higher Alps.

DEAD, a river of South Wales, which runs into the Nevern, near Newport, in the county of Pembroke.

DEAD SEA, or Lake Aſphaltites, a large lake or inland ſea of Paleſtine, which contains neither animal or vegetable life, no verdure on its banks, or fiſh in its waters ; but it is not true that its exhalations are peſtiferous, ſo as to deſtroy birds flying over it. It is very common to ſee ſwallows ſkimming its ſurface, and dipping for the water neceſſary to build their neſts. The immediate cauſe which deprives it of vegetables and animals is the extreme ſaltneſs of the water, which is infinitely ſtronger than that of the ſea. The ſoil around it, equally impregnated with this ſalt, produces no plants, and the air itſelf, which becomes loaded with it from evaporation, and which receives alſo the ſulphureous and bituminous vapours, cannot be favourable to vegetation : hence the deadly aſpect which reigns around this lake. In other reſpects, the ground about it, however, is not marſhy, and its waters are limpid and incorruptible, as muſt be the caſe with diſſolution of ſalt. Mines of foſſil ſalt are found in the ſide of the mountains which extend along the ſhore, and for time immemorial have ſupplied the neighbouring Arabs, and even the city of Jeruſalem. Fragments of ſulphur and bitumen are found alſo, which the Arabs convert into trifling articles of commerce. Naturaliſts have been greatly embarraſſed to find a diſcharge for the waters which the Jordan is continually pouring into the lake, and have therefore been inclined to ſuſpect it had a communication with the Mediterranean ; but, beſides that we know of no gulf to corroborate this ſuppoſition, it has been demonſtrated by accurate calculations, that evaporation is more than ſufficient to carry off the waters brought by the river.

DEADMAN'S ISLAND, one of the Magdalen iſlands. Long. 61. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 47. 22. N.

DEADMAN'S HEAD, or Deadman's Point, a cape of England, on the coaſt of Cornwall, in the Engliſh Channel. Long. 4. 48. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 13. N.

DEAL, a town of England, on the coaſt of Kent, between the North and South Forelands. It has no harbour, but the ſea between the ſhore and the Godwin Sands, called the Downs, is generally a ſecure road for ſhips, where they ſtop both outward and homeward, to put in letters, to ſet paſſengers on ſhore, to take in proviſions, to wait for orders, &c. The pilots of Deal are good ſeamen, bold and active in affording aſſiſtance to veſſels in diſtreſs, in ſaving the lives of thoſe on board, and bringing the cargo to land. Cables, anchors, &c. are always ready to ſupply veſſels which may ſtand in need of them: vegetables and other neceſſaries. Deal is defended by a caſtle; or rather ſeveral caſtles were built to defend the coaſt between Dover and the North Foreland. Julius Cæſar landed here when he made his firſt deſcent on the iſland. Deal is not reckoned one of the Cinque Ports, but is a member of Sandwich. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 4500: 72 miles ESE. London. Long. 1. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 14. N.

DEAN, a foreſt of England, in Glouceſterſhire, between the river Severn and the county of Monmouth. The foreſt once contained 30,000 acres of land, in which were twenty-three pariſhes, and four market towns, with great abundance of fine timber. The iron forges have leſſened the quantity of wood, but not conſumed it, as care is ſaid to be taken in cutting it. The hills abound in iron ore.

DEBRECZIN, a large and populous town of Hungary, without walls. It was taken by the Turks in the year 1684, but retaken by the Imperialiſts in the ſame year: 67 miles WNW. Coloſvar, and 165 ESE. Vienna. Long. 38. 27. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 16. N.

Deça, a river of Spain, which runs into the Xalon, 2 leagues below Anza, in Aragon.

DECCAN, by this general term, which ſignifies South, the Indian geographers include all the countries of India ſouth of the parallels of 21 or 22 degrees of north latitude, forming an extent of territory about equal to the Britiſh iſlands, Spain, and European Turkey. This is the moſt extenſive ſenſe; but in its proper and more limited ſenſe, it means only the countries ſituated between Hindooſtan Proper, the Carnatic, the Weſtern Indian Sea, and the province of Oriſſa: that is, the Deccan is formed of the provinces of Candeiſh, Dowlatabad, or Amednagur, Viſiapour, Golconda, and the weſtern part of Berar. Aurengzebe conquered this country, and erected it into a viceroyalty, or ſubah, the poſſeſſor of which, at the time of the invaſion of Nadir Shah, took the title of Nizam-Elmoulook, or Protector of the Empire; he preſerved an apparent independence: his juriſdiction extending from Burhampour to Cape Comorin, and eaſtward to the ſea. Six provinces depended on this prince, and the number of his ſubjects was eſtimated at thirty-five millions. The Mahrattas are in poſſeſſion of the greater part; other diſtricts have from time to time been formed into ſeparate ſtates: and the conſtant revolutions of India will make the boundaries of each country uncertain. The Nizam's preſent dominions, including his tributaries, are about 430 miles long, from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt, and about 300 wide: Hydrabad is the capital. Each province will be conſidered under its reſpective head.

DELAWARE, one of the United States of America, bounded on the north by Pennſylvania, on the eaſt by the river and bay of Delaware, and on the ſouth and weſt by Maryland; about 92 miles long from north to ſouth, and 20 from eaſt to weſt. It is divided into three counties, Newcaſtle, Kent, and Suſſex; the whole population of which, in the year 1790, amounted to 59,094 inhabitants. The face of the country is in general low; large quantities of ſtagnant water at particular ſeaſons of the year overſpread a great portion of land, and ſubject the inhabitants to intermitting and other complaints. The land is otherwiſe rich and fertile, producing great quantities of grain, and feeding numbers of cattle. The ſoil along the Delaware River, from eight to ten miles into the country, is generally a rich clay, producing large timber, and highly fit for the purpoſes of agriculture. This county was conſidered as part of Pennſylvania, without a ſpecific name, till the revolution, when the three counties became an independent ſtate, under the title of the Delaware State. The chief towns are Dover, Newcaſtle, Wilmington, Milford, and Duck Creek. The eaſtern ſide of the ſtate along the Delaware River and Bay is indented with a great number of ſmall creeks. The principal rivers are the Choplank, Nanticok, and Pocomoke, which have their ſources in this ſtate; all have a weſterly courſe, and are navigable for veſſels of fifty or ſixty tons for twenty or thirty miles into the country. There are in this ſtate ſeven epiſcopal churches, twenty-one Preſbyterian congregations, ſix of Baptiſts, and four of Quakers, beſides a Swediſh church at Wilmington, the oldeſt in the United States, and a number of Methodiſts. The trade is not very conſiderable; the principal exports are wheat and other corn, hay, and lumber.

DELAWARE, a river which iſſues by two ſtreams from the Katſkill Mountains, in the ſtate of New York; in its courſe it ſeparates the ſtate of Pennſylvania from thoſe of New York and Jerſey; and, a few miles below Philadelphia, the ſtate of Delaware from Jerſey, till it loſes itſelf in Delaware Bay, a few miles below Salem.

DELFT, a city of Holland, ſituated on a canal called the Schie, which after traverſing the city, runs into the Meuſe, at Schiedam and Delfthaven; the figure is a long ſquare. Godfrey le Boſſu, duke of Lorraine, having conquered Holland, began to build this city in 1075. The country about it is agreeable, but ſo low, that if great care were not taken to keep the dikes and ſluices in good repair, they would run great hazard of being overwhelmed with the waters. This city was formerly much celebrated for beer, of which it exported large quantities: as likewiſe for a peculiar kind of glazed earthen-ware, called Delft, from the place of its manufacture or invention. The magiſtracy is compoſed of four burgomaſters, and ſeven echevins, jointly with the vroedſchap, or common council, who name the eſcout for three years, and continue him if they judge proper. The city holds a third rank in the ſtates, and has many handſome houſes and grand buildings. Delft has often experienced the calamities of war, and unfortunate accidents. In the fourteenth century, Albert de Bavaria, comte of Holland, took the city, after a ſiege of ſix weeks, diſmantled and ruined the caſtle, and obliged the citizens to pay ten thouſand crowns, becauſe they had favoured the factions of the Houks againſt the Cabillautins. In the year 1536, the city was reduced to aſhes by a dreadful fire, during which a ſtork, not being able to ſave her young, was obſerved to precipitate herſelf into the flames. It was ſoon after built with greater magnificence. In the year 1654, it was again greatly damaged by a fire which deſtroyed a magazine (in which was ſtored a great quantity of gunpowder) and above 500 houſes; ſince which the powder-magazine is built at ſome diſtance from the town. Before the reformation, Delft had ten religious houſes, beſides hoſpitals and chapels. The celebrated Hugo Grotius was a native of this place: 29 miles SSW. Amſterdam, and 8 NW. Rotterdam. Long. 21. 47. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 1. N.

DELFTHAVEN, a ſea-port town of Holland, ſituated on the north ſide of the Meuſe, with a canal cut to join the Schie, by means of which boats may paſs to Delft, the Hague, and other places. It is ſtrongly fortified, and well defended by dams: 2 miles SW. Rotterdam, and 8 SSE. Delft.

DELFZUYL, a fortreſs of the United Dutch States, in Groningen, in the Ommelands, ſituated at the mouth of the river Damſter, where it empties itſelf into the river Ems. It has often been demoliſhed and rebuilt, and is now a ſtrong place, fortified with good ramparts, ſeven baſtions, and a citadel, with large and deep ditches; the harbour is very convenient, and will contain a great number of veſſels. The Spaniards laid ſiege to it in 1581, under the conduct of the comte de Rennebourg, who having blocked up the river Ems and the ſea coaſt, compelled them to ſurrender after ſixteen days, on condition that five companies of deſerters were permitted to depart unmoleſted. In 1590, prince Maurice retook it, ſince which it has remained in the poſſeſſion of the ſtates: 11 miles WSW. Emden, and 61 NE. Groningen. Long 24. 6. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 19. N.

DELHI, a country of Hindooſtan; bounded on the north by the mountains of Thibet, on the eaſt by the country of Thibet and the ſubah of Oude, on the ſouth by the countries of Agra and Agimere, and on the weſt by Moultan; about 165 miles in length, and 140 in breadth. It is divided into ſeveral provinces or circars, and contains many cities and towns. Several parts of it produce wheat, rice, millet, ſugar, indigo, pulſe, and fruits of various ſorts. The principal rivers are the Jumnah and the Ganges: the climate is more temperate than that of Agra, and was formerly the richeſt part of Hindooſtan; but having been the ſeat of continual wars, it has been miſerably laid waſte, and many parts of it almoſt depopulated. As it now remains, it conſtitutes, perhaps, the whole of the dominions of the great Mogul. Delhi is the capital.

DELHI, a city of Aſia, at preſent the nominal capital of Hindooſtan, and actually ſo during the greateſt part of the time ſince the Mahometan conqueſt. Its ancient name is ſaid to have been Inderput. Shah Jehan, grandſon of Acbar, and father to Aurungzebe, made this city his reſidence, to avoid the heat of Agra, and, adding greatly to its ſize, directed it to be called Shakjehanabad. It contains three principal ſtreets, which are long and ſpacious, the others are narrow, crooked, and dirty. It has two grand moſques, built at a great expence, of red ſtone brought from Fattipour; and two others, whoſe cupolas are covered with gold. The number of ſmall ones is incredible: it is compoſed of two towns, the Old Town founded by the Gentoos; the New by the emperor Schah Jehan, and in the whole rather more than nine miles, but not twelve, in circumference. The reſidence of the Mogul is a magnificent palace, built of red ſtone, about a thouſand ells in length, and 600 in breadth, and coſt 10,500,000 rupees. The outſides of the houſes are mean, but the inſide is ſaid to be in general handſome, and well furniſhed. In the year 1399, this city was taken and plundered, with dreadful cruelties, by Timûr Bek, who carried away immenſe riches, and the principal part of the inhabitants as ſlaves. In the year 1739, Nadir Shah invaded Hindooſtan, and entered Delhi on the 2d of March, demanding the ſum of twenty-five millions ſterling. This ſum was not obtained without great diſturbances, which occaſioned the ſhedding of much blood; great cruelties were exerciſed, and many, preſſed for their quotas, killed themſelves. On the 6th of May, the conqueror left Delhi; the loſs ſuſtained by the emperor and the people, in jewels, treaſures, goods, deſtruction of fields and of the buildings, amounted to near one arrib of rupees, or 125,000,000l. ſterling. Out of this Nadir Shah carried away to the value of 70 krores, or 87,500,000l. in jewels and other effects; beſides above 12,000,000l. ſterling which fell to the ſhare of the officers and ſoldiers. The charges of his army while he continued there, the arrears, pay, and gratuity advanced them, with what property was deſtroyed by fire, and fields laid waſte, amounted to near 20 krores, or 25,000,000l. Of the inhabitants of the empire, from the arrival of the Shah in Hindooſtan to his return, 200,000 were deſtroyed. Long. 77. 40. E. Greenwich. Lat. 28. 37. N.

DENMARK, a kingdom of Europe, formed by the union of a part of the continent called Jutland, and ſeveral iſlands between the North Sea and the Baltic; two of theſe iſlands, Zealand and Funen, are large, the reſt are ſmall; their names are Langieland, Laaland, Falſter, Mona, or Moen, Arroe, Samſoe, Bornholm, Amack, Anholt, Leſſoe, or Leſſaw, with many others of leſs conſequence; all theſe will be conſidered under their proper heads. Jutland, or that part of Denmark which belongs to the continent, is bounded on all ſides by the ſea except towards the ſouth, where it is bounded by Germany. Denmark is conſidered one of the moſt ancient monarchies in Europe, and was known to the Romans as part of Scandinavia, and called Cimbrica Cherſoneſus. How it acquired the name of Denmark is not certainly known; the moſt generally received opinion is that of Saxo-Grammaticus, who derives it from Dan, the firſt founder of the Daniſh monarchy, and Mark, or Marc country, i. e. the country of Dan. The kingdom is rich and populous, but of ſmall extent; commerce is become flouriſhing by different manufactures eſtabliſhed in latter times. The form of government is very different from what it formerly was; the crown is hereditary, and the power of the king abſolute. This change took place in the year 1660; before that time the kingdom was elective by the ſtates, whoſe authority was almoſt without bounds, leaving to the king little more than a ſhadow of royalty. They not only decided on war or peace, and gave their conſent to new taxes, but compelled thoſe princes whom they elected to the crown, to ſwear at the time of their coronation that they would ſuffer themſelves to be dethroned if, without the approbation of the ſtates, they ſhould encroach on the public treaſure, which was kept at Cronenburg, and reſerved for extraordinary neceſſities. The ſtates were compoſed of the clergy, nobility, citizens, and peaſants. In the year 1658, Charles Guſtavus, king of Sweden, laid ſiege to Copenhagen, and threatened the conqueſt of the kingdom. Internal weakneſs and civil diſſenſions in Denmark rendered the proſpect of his ſucceſs the greater. Frederick the Third, naturally of a peaceable and indolent turn of mind, was rouſed by the ſituation of his kingdom, almoſt at the mercy of a haughty enemy, ſuddenly ſurmounted his natural coldneſs, and exhibited proofs of courage equal to the greateſt hero. All ranks were united by the example of the king in their exertions for the defence of the city, which held out till the 27th of May, 1660, when peace was made between the two kingdoms. At the concluſion of this war, a diet was called to take into conſideration the exhauſted ſtate of the country, and raiſe the neceſſary ſupplies by freſh taxes. Diſputes aroſe between the nobility and the other ſtates on the mode of taxation, till at length they all, aſſiſted by ſome political manœuvres, declared the crown to be hereditary, and the power of the king unlimited and abſolute. In the times of heatheniſm, the Danes worſhipped the gods Freyer, Thor, Thyr, Odin, and Freya, of whom Odin was the chief. Chriſtianity was introduced in the ninth century, and Harold VI. king of Denmark, was baptized in the year 960. The doctrine of Luther was eſtabliſhed at the diet held in the year 1537; other religious ſects are allowed a free exerciſe of their religion. There are ſix biſhops in Denmark, but no archbiſhops. They have no other power than ſuperintending, examining, and ordaining new preachers; and the laws only give them the name of ſuperintendents. Their revenues ariſe from lands, tithes, and a ſmall ſum which they receive from every church. The number of ſouls in the iſlands of Denmark and Jutland is eſtimated at 800,000, in the duchy of Sleſwick, or South Jutland, 24,000; to which, if we add Norway, the duchy of Holſtein, and other eſtates in Germany, the whole number will be rather more than 2,000,000. The royal revenues ariſing from the land tax, duties paid by veſſels paſſing the Sound, poll-tax, and other impoſitions, amount to 1,400,000, and the expenditure to 1,384,000. In the year 1779, the navy conſiſted of 38 ſhips of the line, and 20 frigates; but of theſe no more than 25, and 15 frigates, were fit for ſervice. The peaſants of Norway are free; on the other hand, the peaſants in Denmark are ſlaves to the nobility: but freedom is ſaid to have been lately given to the peaſants of the crown by the prince. The exports of Denmark exceed the imports to the amount of 55,000 crowns a year. The exports are principally grain of different kinds, brandy, horſes, cattle, hogs, iron, copper, &c. beſides the produce of their manufactures, as gloves, lace, linen, and woollen cloth, ſtuffs, hats, earthen ware, &c. Commercial companies are eſtabliſhed in Denmark to the Eaſt Indies, Weſt Indies, and Africa, and trade in general ſeems making rapid progreſs; in the year 1746, the number of manufacturers in Copenhagen was only 1200; in the year 1780, they were upwards of 4000.

DEPTFORD, a town of England, ſituated on the Thames, partly in the county of Kent, and partly in Surry. It was generally known in ancient records by the name of Deptford Strond, alias Weſt Greenwich, a name which, in later times, became ſolely appropriated to the lower parts of it on the bank of the Thames, the upper town retaining that of Deptford only. Deptford is now a large and populous town, though it has no market, and is divided into Upper and Lower Deptford. It contains about 2000 houſes, many of which are neat and well-built. The greateſt ſupport and conſequence of Deptford ariſes from its dock. It has a wet dock, of two acres, for ſhips; and another of one acre and a half, well provided with timber and all ſorts of naval ſtores. Beſides the national docks, there are ſeveral others belonging to ſhipbuilders, for merchants' veſſels. At Deptford is the ſociety of the Trinity Houſe; founded, in the year 1515, by Sir Thomas Spert, knight, commander of the great ſhip Henry Grace de Dieu, and comptroller of the navy to Henry VIII. for the regulation of ſeamen, and the convenience of ſhips and mariners on the coaſt, and incorporated by the above-mentioned prince, who confirmed to them, not only the rights and privileges of the company of mariners of England, but their ſeveral poſſeſſions at Deptford, which, together with the grants of Queen Elizabeth and King Charles II. were alſo confirmed by letters patent of the firſt of James II. in the year 1685, by the name of "The Maſter, Wardens, and Aſſiſtants of the Guild or Fraternity of the moſt glorious and undivided Trinity, and of St. Clement, in the pariſh of Deptford Strond, in the county of Kent." This corporation is governed by a maſter, four wardens, eight aſſiſtants, and eighteen elder brothers; but the inferior members of the fraternity, named younger brethren, are of an unlimited number; for every maſter, or mate, expert in navigation, may be admitted as ſuch; and theſe ſerve as a continual nurſery to ſupply the vacancies among the elder brethren, when removed by death, or otherwiſe. The maſter, wardens, aſſiſtants, and elder brethren, are by charter inveſted with the following powers: that of examining the mathematical children of Chriſt's Hoſpital; the examining of the maſters of his majeſty's ſhips; the appointing of pilots to conduct ſhips in and out of the river Thames; and the amercing all ſuch as ſhall preſume to act as maſter of a ſhip of war, or pilot, without their approbation, in a pecuniary mulct of twenty ſhillings; ſettling the ſeveral rates of pilotage, and erecting light-houſes, and other ſea-marks, upon the ſeveral coaſts of the kingdom, for the ſecurity of navigation, to which light-houſes all ſhips pay one halfpenny a tun; granting licences to poor ſeamen, not free of the city, to row on the river Thames for their ſupport, in the intervals of ſea ſervice, or when paſt going to ſea; the preventing of aliens from ſerving on board Engliſh ſhips, without their licence, upon the penalty of five pounds for each offence; puniſhing of ſeamen for deſertion, or mutiny, in the merchant's ſervice; and the hearing and determining the complaints of officers and ſeamen in the merchants' ſervice; but ſubject to an appeal to the lords of the Admiralty, or the judge of the court of Admiralty. To this company belongs the ballaſt-office, for clearing and deepening the river Thames, by taking from thence a ſufficient quantity of ballaſt, for the ſupply of all ſhips that ſail out of that river; in which ſervice 60 barges, with two men each, are conſtantly employed, and all ſhips that take in ballaſt pay them one ſhilling a ton, for which it is brought to the ſhips' ſides. In conſideration of the increaſe of the poor of this fraternity, they are by their charter impowered to purchaſe in mortmain lands, tenements, &c. to the amount of 500l. per annum; and alſo to receive charitable benefactions of well diſpoſed perſons, to the amount of 500l. per annum, clear of reprizes. There are annually relieved by this company about 3000 poor ſeamen, their widows, and orphans, at the expence of 6000l.: 4 miles E. London.

Towards the north-weſt it is very mountainous, and that part is called the High Peak. The eaſtern part of the county and the centre are called the Low Peak. The ſouthern part is more level. The ſoil of the High is very ſhallow, and hardly admits the uſe of the plough, it affords however paſture for ſheep: the Low Peak is more capable of cultivation, and the ſouthern parts are fertile. Derbyſhire is divided into ſix hundreds, which contain 106 pariſhes, and ten market towns. The market towns are Derby, Cheſterfield, Wirkſworth, Bakewell, Aſhbourn, Bolſover, Alfreton, Chapel in the Frith, Dronfield, and Tidſwall. The principal rivers are the Derwent, the Trent, the Wye, the Dove, and the Rother. In the mountains are lead, iron, and copper ores, antimony, alabaſter, millſtones, &c. lime-ſtone in many parts, and coals in a few places. The Peak is generally reckoned one of the higheſt hills in England. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at rather more than 155,000.

DETTINGEN, a village of Germany, in the electorate of Mentz, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the Maine, where a battle was fought between the Engliſh, under the command of king George II. in perſon, and the earl of Stair ; and the French, under the command of the duke of Noailles. The Britiſh troops had advanced into the country, where they were in want of proviſions, and in ſuch condition that an engagement muſt have been at a diſadvantage, and a retreat impracticable : the impetuoſity of the French led them to action too ſoon, they paſſed the defile which they ſhould have been contented to guard ; and, under the conduct of the duke of Gramont, their horſe charged the Engliſh with great fury ; but being received with intrepidity, they were obliged to make a precipitate retreat over the Maine, with the loſs of about 5000 men. His Britannic majeſty, with great perſonal courage, expoſed himſelf to a ſevere fire of the enemy's cannon ; and in the midſt of the engagement encouraged his troops by his preſence and example. DEVENTER, a town of the United Dutch States, and the capital of Overiſſel, was formerly a free and Imperial city ; it is ſituated in a part of the province called Zallant, on the river Iſſel. It is large and populous, having ſix gates, and is ſurrounded by a wall, flanked with a great number of towers, and defended with large and deep ditches, filled with the waters of the Iſſel. Some think it took its name from Davon, a rich man, the friend of St. Livin, the apoſtle of the country, who firſt converted the people to Chriſtianity ; it was erected into a biſhopric, ſubject to the archbiſhop of Utrecht, in the year 1559, by pope Paul IV. but this biſhopric continued only till the Proteſtant religion was eſtabliſhed in the province : beſides the cathedral, they had three other pariſh churches, and ſeveral other religious houſes. The magiſtracy is compoſed of burgomaſters, echevins, and common council, which are changed every year ; beſides which it has a large council, compoſed of 48 of the principal citizens, who meet four or five times a year. The ſtates took it the 10th of November, 1578, after a ſiege of three months, but as the inhabitants were not well affected, the earl of Leiceſter entered with ſome Engliſh troops, and ſecured the place. Colonel Stanley, who had been appointed governor, ſurrendered to the prince of Parma, the 31ſt of January, 1587. The Spaniards kept it till 1591, when it was again taken by prince Maurice. In 1672, the city, rather than undergo the calamities of a ſiege, ſurrendered to the biſhop of Munſter and elector of Cologn, on the condition that the city ſhould be re-united to the empire, under the archbiſhop of Cologn and biſhop of Munſter ; that the reformed religion ſhould be maintained ; and that the garriſon ſhould be priſoners of war. The prelates abandoned the city the 2d of May, 1674, after receiving 42,000 crowns for its ranſom : 46 miles E. Amſterdam. Long. 23. 34. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 18. N.

It is a corporation and a borough town, returning two members to the Britiſh parliament. Here was formerly a caſtle, ſuppoſed to be one of the ſtrongeſt in England ; but now nearly deſtroyed. Two markets are held weekly, on Monday principally for butchers' meat, the other, on Thurſday, is very large for corn, wool, cattle, &c. Very conſiderable manufactures are carried on here, particularly of ſerges, kerſeymeres, and broad-cloath. In the market place is erected a ſtone and inſcription to a memorial of divine vengeance inflicted on an unhappy woman who called God to witneſs a falſehood : 19 miles E. Bath, and 88½ W. DEVONSHIRE, a county of England ; bounded on the north by the Briſtel Channel, on the eaſt by Somerſetſhire and Dorſetſhire, on the ſouth by the Engliſh Channel, and on the weſt by Cornwall, from which it is ſeparated almoſt the whole extent by the river Tamar ; is about 70 miles from north to ſouth, and about 60 from eaſt to weſt. It is divided into 33 hundreds, which contain one city, Exeter, 40 market towns, 1733 villages, and about 340,000 inhabitants. The air is mild in the vallies ; and ſharp, though healthy, on the hills. The ſoil of the weſtern parts is generally coarſe and moory, or ſtiff clay, which is not proper for ſheep, but feeds a great number of oxen, ſent afterwards to the better paſtures of Somerſetſhire, to be made ready for ſlaughter. The northern parts are dry and healthy, where the downs afford good paſture for ſheep, and the arable lands yield good crops of corn ; yet not equal to the eaſt and middle parts. However, the ſouth of Devonſhire is eſteemed the moſt fertile. That part called the South Hams, near Torbay, is particularly celebrated for the excellence and quantity of its cyder. Devonſhire was formerly more celebrated for its mines than even Cornwall ; and in the reign of king John, when the mines of the latter were farmed for 100 marks, the mines of Devonſhire produced 100l. per annum. Four Stannary courts were eſtabliſhed for the government of the miners, and regulation of the mines : and although Cornwall has nearly monopolized the trade, the Stannary laws in ſome degree remain in force : the Devonſhire tinners are not under the lord lieutenant, but form a militia by themſelves. Iron mines have been diſcovered, as likewiſe copper mines, with veins of loadſtone and ſilver. Here are likewiſe quarries of good ſtone for building, and ſlate for covering houſes, great quantities of which are exported. The chief manufactures are ſerges, duroys, druggets, ſhalloons, narrow cloths, ſtuffs, &c. The principal rivers are the Ex, Tamar, Tave, Lad, Oke, Tame, Touridge, Dart, Ken, &c. The towns are Barnſtaple, Plymouth, Tiverton, Dartmouth, Taviſtock, Oakhampton, Aſhburton, Honiton, Plympton, Totneſs, Bearalſton, Crediton, Biddiford, Topſham, Axminſter, Bampton, Newton-Abbot, Lyſton, Bowe, Bradninch, Brent, Kingſbridge, Dodbrook, Chudleigh, Chumleigh, Cullumpton, Comb Martin, Culliton, Hartland, Hatherly, Holdſworthy, Ilfracomb, Modbury, Morton, Sidmouth, South Moulton, Torrington, Chegford, Sheepwaſh, and Teignmouth, or Tinmouth ; of which the eleven firſt are borough towns, and ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament ; which, with two for the city of Exeter, and two for the county, make in the whole 26 members.

Dixmude was firſt ſurrounded with walls in the year 1270. Philip the Fair, king of France, took it in 1299, and augmented its fortifications. It has often experienced the calamities of war and fire. The magiſtracy is compoſed of two burgomaſters, 13 echevins, and a common-council. It has ſeveral convents, and in the Hotel de Ville they preſerve an image of the Virgin, which they ſay ſhed many drops of blood from a wound given by a German ſoldier with his ſword. It has been often taken and retaken by the French and Spaniards, and was ceded to the latter by the treaty of the Pyrenées, concluded the 7th of November, 1659, but they abandoned it in October, 1690. In September, 1692, they placed in it a freſh garriſon : and again abandoned it in January, 1693, after having ſeized on Furnes. William III. king of England, then put in a ſtrong garriſon, and added conſiderably to the fortifications, but the French took it in 1695, by the treachery or cowardice of the governor, colonel John Antoine Ellenberger, major-general of the Daniſh troops, who had eight regiments of infantry, and one of dragoons, with plenty of artillery, and ſtores of all kinds, neceſſary to ſuſtain a ſiege of ſeveral months ; yet he ſurrendered on an infamous capitulation, without having ſuſtained an aſſault, or ſuffered the leaſt breach ; he was afterwards tried for cowardice, by a council of war, and condemned to loſe his head, which ſentence was executed at Ghent, the 30th of November, 1695. DOMINICA, an iſland of the Weſt Indies, ſo named by Chriſtopher Columbus, from the circumſtance of diſcovering it on Sunday, (November 3, 1493) ſituated between Guadaloupe and Martinico; about 29 miles in length, and 16 in breadth, containing 186,436 acres of land, and divided into 10 pariſhes. It contains many high and rugged mountains, among which are volcanoes, that frequently diſcharge eruptions. From ſome of theſe mountains iſſue ſprings of hot water, whoſe medicinal virtues are much commended. Dominica is well watered, there being upwards of thirty rivers in the iſland, beſides a great number of rivulets. The ſoil, in moſt of the interior country, is a light brown coloured mould, and appears to have been waſhed from the mountains. Towards the ſea-coaſt, and in many of the vallies, it is a deep, black, and rich native earth, and ſeems well adapted to the cultivation of all the articles of Weſt Indian produce. The under ſtratum is, in ſome parts, a yellow or brick clay, in others a ſtiff terrace; but it is in moſt places very ſtony. In the woods of Dominica are innumerable ſwarms of bees, which hive in the trees, and produce great quantities of wax and honey, both of which are equal in goodneſs to any in Europe. Dominica was confirmed to Great Britain by the peace of Paris, in 1763, having been taken from the French in 1759. At the commencement of the American war, this iſland was in a flouriſhing ſtate. The port of Roſeau having been declared a free port by act of parliament, was reſorted to by trading veſſels from moſt parts of the foreign Weſt Indies, as well as from America. The French and Spaniards purchaſed great numbers of negroes there for the ſupply of their ſettlements, together with vaſt quantities of the merchandize and manufactures of Great Britain; payment for all which was made chiefly in bullion, indigo, and cotton, and completed in mules and cattle; articles of prime neceſſity to the planter. Thus the iſland, though in itſelf certainly not ſo fertile as ſome others of leſs extent in its neighbourhood, was becoming very rapidly a colony of conſiderable importance; but unfortunately it wanted that protection which alone could give its poſſeſſions ſtability and value. On Monday, the 7th of September, 1778, a French armament, conſiſting of a forty gun ſhip, three frigates, and about thirty ſail of armed ſloops and ſchooners, having on board upwards of 2000 regular troops, and a lawleſs banditti of volunteers, appeared off the iſland, under the command of the marquis de Bouillé, governor of Martinico, and general of the French Windward Weſt Indian Iſlands. The whole number of the militia in the iſland did not exceed one hundred. The ſmall force, however, that was collected, behaved with that ſpirit and gallantry, which give room to lament that they were not better ſupported. But gallantry was unavailing againſt ſuch ſuperiority of numbers; for about 2000 of the French having ſhortly after gained poſſeſſion of the heights above Roſeau, determined the fate of the iſland. The bravery of the inhabitants, however, obtained for them very honourable terms of capitulation. It was reſtored to Great Britain by the peace of 1783. The principal towns are Portſmouth, and Roſeau, or Charlotte's Town. The exports of the iſland, from January 5th, 1787, to January 5th, 1788, were 71,312 cwt. of ſugar; 63,392 gallons of rum, 16,803 gallons of molaſſes, 1,194 cwt. of cocoa, 18,149 cwt. of coffee, 11,250 pounds of indigo, 970,816 pounds of cotton, 161 cwt. of ginger, with miſcellaneous articles, to the value of 11,912l. 10s. 9d. DORSETSHIRE, a county of England; bounded on the north by Somerſetſhire and Wiltſhire, on the eaſt by Hampſhire, on the ſouth by the Britiſh Channel, and on the weſt by Devonſhire and Somerſetſhire; extending from eaſt to weſt about 60 miles, and from 15 to 35 north to ſouth. It is for the moſt part hilly; the ſoil is, in general, ſhallow, over a chalky bottom, but in ſome of the vallies very rich; the whole is eſtimated at 775,000 acres, of which 250,000 are ſuppoſed to be in tillage, 80,000 water meadow, 90,000 paſture, 9000 woods and coppices, 290,000 ſheep paſture, and 86,000 uncultivated. The number of ſheep kept in this county is eſtimated at upwards of 800,000, of which 150,000 are annually ſold, and ſent out of the county. Great advantages are derived from the ſheep, not only from the fleece and carcaſe, but likewiſe from the manure. In one particular inſtance the ſheep owners excel all other parts of the kingdom, which is, in providing ewes to yean at a remarkably early ſeaſon, in the midland counties, which ſupply the metropolis with fat lambs. The wool produced in this county is ſhort and fine, of a cloſe texture, and the quality of it is highly eſteemed in the manufacture of that ſtaple commodity called broad cloth. The wether ſheep are conſtantly folded all the year round, running over the ewe leas, or downs, by day, and are penned on the tillage by night; they are penned late in the evening, and let out from the fold before ſun-riſe in the winter, and not later than ſix o'clock in the ſummer. The ewes are folded only in ſummer, that is, when they have no lambs. From a due obſervation of the quality and number of ſheep bred and kept in the county, it may be ſuppoſed, with ſome degree of accuracy, that the produce of wool annually is 90,000 weys, or weights of 31 pounds each. Among various articles of great import to the community in the county of Dorſet, may be reckoned the cultivation of hemp and flax, and their manufacture. In the neighbourhood of Bridport and Beminſter, all ſorts of twine, ſtring, packthread, netting, cordage, and ropes, are made; from the fineſt thread, uſed by ſadlers in lieu of ſilk, to the cable, which holds the firſt rate man of war. The nets made for the fiſhery at Newfoundland, as well as for home uſe, and the ſails for ſhipping of every kind, are manufactured of the beſt quality, as well as ſacking for hammocs, &c. and all kinds of bags and tarpaulins; and in addition to the great quantity of flax and hemp uſed here, not more than one-third of it is allowed by the manufacturers to be of Britiſh growth; the remaining two-thirds of it is imported from Ruſſia and America, as raw materials. The manufacture carried on at Beminſter employs upwards of 2000 people. At Bridport there are a great number of manufactures, and about 1800 people are ſaid to be employed in this town; and in its environs, as far as ſeven or eight miles round, upwards of 7000 people are in conſtant work. No ores of any kind have been found in this county, nor mines of coals; but quarries of excellent ſtone are found in the iſland of Purbeck, near the ſea, where upwards of 400 people are employed in digging and tooling the ſtone. The ſtone obtained at Purbeck is uſed for walling, floors, ſteps, foot pavements, &c. About 50,000 tons are annually ſhipped at Swannage. The whole iſland of Portland ſeems to be one entire maſs of the moſt beautiful ſtone, chiefly uſed in the metropolis and elſewhere for the moſt ſuperb buildings, and is univerſally admired for its cloſe texture and durability, ſurpaſſing any other. About a mile diſtant from Corf-Caſtle, are found large quantities of pipe clay, which is in great eſtimation, and abſolutely neceſſary for the uſe of the potters in Staffordſhire and other places : about 11,000 tons are annually ſent from this place for that purpoſe, and about 100 men are conſtantly employed in digging it. Some of the pits are not more than 10 or 12 feet deep. Dorſetſhire is divided into 34 hundreds, which contain 22 towns, and 248 pariſhes. The towns are Dorcheſter, Lyme, Shafteſbury, Pool, Bridport, Wareham, Corf-Caſtle, Weymouth, Melcomb-Regis, Sherborn, Blandford, Cranborn, Beminſter, Abbotſbury, Bere, Everſhot, Frampton, Milton Abby, Stalbridge, Sturminſter, Cerne, and Winburn; of which the firſt nine are borough towns, and ſend two members each to the Britiſh parliament; making, with two for the county, 20 members in the whole. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 89,000. The principal rivers are the Stour, the Frome, and the Piddle.

DORT, or Dordrecht, a city of Holland, which holds the firſt rank in the aſſembly of the States; it is the capital of a ſmall territory called the Bailiwick of Dort, and is ſituated on a ſmall iſland, formed by the waters of the Meuſe, the Merwe, the Rhine, and the Linge; ſeparated from the iſle of Iſſelmond by the Meuſe, and from the iſle of Beyerlandt by a canal. It was firſt detached from the main land November 17th, 1421, by an irruption of the rivers, which broke down the dikes, drowned one hundred thouſand perſons, and deſtroyed ſeventy-two villages; this dreadful calamity, it is ſaid, was owing to a peaſant, who, out of hatred wiſhing to drown his neighbour, opened the dyke between Gertruydenburg and Dort, not doubting of his being able to ſtop it again when the buſineſs was done; but the tide being aſſiſted by the wind, the waters poured in with ſuch fury that it carried all before it, men, cattle, and even houſes : they record the wonderful preſervation of a child which was borne in a cradle by the waters ſafe to Dort. Since that time the inhabitants have been very careful to preſerve their dykes, and keep them in repair, and moſt of the villages are rebuilt. In the year 1457, the city was nearly deſtroyed by fire, above 2000 houſes being conſumed, together with the halls, the church of Notre Dame, and the town-houſe. The comtes of Holland held their court, and were inaugurated at Dort, and granted many privileges to the inhabitants; the town is large and well peopled, not regularly fortified, but defended with ſeveral towers; its ſituation is very convenient for trade, eſpecially in wine, corn, wood, and other productions of Germany, and the countries connected with the Rhine and the Meuſe. In 1618 and 1619, was held a famous aſſembly of the clergy from all the Proteſtant ſtates in Europe, called the Synod of Dort, to enquire into and ſettle the diſputes between the Arminians and Calviniſts called Gomariſts, otherwiſe called Remonſtrants and Anti remonſtrants. The doctrines of Arminius were condemned; and Vorſtius, profeſſor at Leyden, the principal defender of thoſe tenets, with above a hundred miniſters and profeſſors, were baniſhed from the United States, becauſe they refuſed to ſubſcribe to the decree of the Synod; John Olden Barnevelt was beheaded; the celebrated Hugo Grotius was ſentenced to perpetual impriſonment; and other learned men, favourers of that opinion, puniſhed. Among the public buildings are the town-houſe, the exchange, the hoſpitals, and the public library. The church of Notre Dame is a good building, the tower lofty, and furniſhed with muſical chimes : there is another church dedicated to St. Nicholas, built in the year 1568; it had likewiſe, before the revolution, ſeveral religious houſes for monks and nuns, but they are all now applied to other uſes. It has two canals, by means of which veſſels loaded may enter the city. The company of tradeſmen, and ſome other communities, elect the magiſtrates, and name one part of the members of the council of the city : 35 miles S. Amſterdam. Long. 22. 6. E. DRESDEN, a city of Germany, and capital of Saxony, ſituated at the conflux of the Elbe and the Weſeritz. It is the ſeat of the principal tribunals of the country; and divided into three towns, New Dreſden, or Dreſden; Old Dreſden, or Neuſtadt, and Frederickſtadt. New Dreſden was built in the year 1020, on the right bank of the Elbe, and became a town in the year 1216; here the elector of Saxony reſides in an ancient chateau, the apartments of which are magnificent, and furniſhed with a numerous library, a rich cabinet of rare and precious articles, mathematical inſtruments, &c. Beſides a number of palaces, this quarter contains an opera-houſe, an arſenal, a foundry, three Lutheran, and one Roman Catholic church, the latter of a moſt beautiful architecture. In the fauxbourgs are the priſon, a houſe of orphans, two hoſpitals, a military hoſpital, a poor-houſe, a foundling hoſpital, a plate-glaſs manufacture, &c. Old Dreſden, or as it is called Neuſtadt, owes its origin to a chateau, built by Charlemagne, in the year 808. It was of little conſequence till the year 1403, when it began to acquire importance. Here are extenſive barracks, the menagerie, the china manufacture, a church, a college, &c. From the ſquare, in which is a ſtatue of Auguſtus II. king of Poland, an elector of Saxony. An ally of lime-trees reaches to Frederickſtadt. In the whole, Dreſden is ſuppoſed to contain between 80 and 90,000 inhabitants. The manufactures are fine cloth, ſerges, ſhalloons, ſtockings, linen, ſtuffs of linen and ſilk mixed, carpets, Morocco leather, plate-glaſs, porcelain, &c. In the year 1756, in the war between Pruſſia and Auſtria, the king of Pruſſia took poſſeſſion of Leipſic and Dreſden, in a ſtate of neutrality; towards the cloſe of the year 1758, the king of Pruſſia, being compelled to evacuate Saxony, marſhal Daun marched towards Dreſden, threatened to beſiege it, and on the 9th of November, made an attempt on the ſuburbs, in which his troops were beaten back. Count Schmettau, who commanded in the city, ſet fire to the ſuburbs, which were greatly ſuperior to the city within the walls, and inhabited by the moſt wealthy of the inhabitants, with the richeſt and moſt conſiderable of the manufacturers. Count Schmettau acted as a ſoldier entruſted with the command of a city, perhaps, ought to have done; he reſiſted the united prayers of the royal family, the magiſtrates and citizens; combuſtibles were placed in ſeveral places, and the whole ſet on fire, after which they retired within the walls. Marſhal Daun retired on the 17th. On the 27th of July following, the Imperial troops appeared again before the town, and Schmettau ſurrendered on capitulation, on the 4th of Auguſt. In the year 1760, the king of Pruſſia attempted to recover the place, but marſhal Daun ſeized the opportunity of throwing troops into the town, and ſupporting the beſieged with a numerous army; the Pruſſian army retired, but not before a conſiderable number of houſes were conſumed by fire from the bombs: 62 miles NNW. DUBLIN, a county of Ireland, bounded on the north by the county of Meath, on the eaſt by the Iriſh Sea, on the ſouth by the county of Wicklow, and on the weſt by the counties of Meath and Kildare ; 25 miles in extent from north to ſouth, and from 9 to 16 broad from eaſt to weſt. It contains about 142,050 acres, and in the year 1790, 25,510 houſes, and 107 pariſhes, 20 of which are in the city of Dublin. This county is in general flat, except towards the ſouth, where it is mountainous and rocky, towards the ſea it is broken into bays and creeks, with ſeveral places of reſort for ſea-bathing. Ten members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. two for the county, four for the city and univerſity of Dublin, and for the boroughs of Swords and Newcaſtle two each. The principal river is the Liffey.

DUBLIN CITY, the metropolis of Ireland, and one of the moſt beautiful cities in the world. In a charter given it by Edgar, more than 800 years ago, we find it called nobiliſſima civitas ; and if ever city deſerved this appellation, that of Dublin has the faireſt claim to it. It is extremely ancient, having been noticed in the 2d century by Ptolemy, who gives it the name of Eblana, or Deblana, ſignifying in old Britiſh Black-Water ; and indeed the name was very appoſite, the bed of the Liffey, whoſe river runs through the city, being in this place boggy, and of courſe black. The Iriſh to this day call Dublin Ath-Cliath, or Bally-Ath-Cliath, the Town on the ford of Hurdles, the ancient city being difficult of approach except by the aid of Hurdles, on account of the ſwamps and marſhes that ſurrounded it. Beſide the charter of Edgar, another charter was given to this city by Henry II. which indeed laid the foundation of its Liberties. This charter granted to the king's ſubjects of Briſtol the city of Dublin for their habitation, to be held of him and his heirs for ever : it is now however loſt, and another of John, to be found in the black-book at Chriſtchurch, is that by which the citizens preſerve their franchiſe. Two centuries before the invaſion of Henry, the Danes had conſtructed broad and ſtrong walls that ſurrounded the city, at that time about a mile in circumference ; but theſe walls exiſt no more. The entrance into the harbour is judged to be one of the moſt beautiful in Europe. After paſſing the Iſle of Lambay, and that of Ireland's Eye, a rock lofty and groteſque, and leaving the craggy mountains of Howth on your right ; or, after paſſing the rocky cliffs of Bray, as you approach from the ſouth, the Bay that is ſomewhat more than two leagues broad, opens a moſt grand and extenſive proſpect. On one hand the hills and mountains of Wicklow ſtrike the eye in magnificent ſcenery; on the other, the gently-riſing ſhores of Clontarf fill the ſpectator with wonder and delight ; while between both, the city on a riſing ground at the extremity of the bay, and about ſeven miles from the Ocean, elevates its domes and ſpires, that terminate this beautiful proſpect. The Caſſoon, or lighthouſe, ſituated about four miles from the city, ſeems like another Pharos, to riſe out of the ſea. The paſſage here in ſtormy weather is very unſafe : but a ſtone-wall, that ſtretches for three miles, confines the channel on each ſide till you reach Ringſend, to which the city has nearly extended. On the north ſide of the wall is the harbor, where veſſels lie ſafe at anchor with an open ſea. From Ringſend up into the whole city, the river is commodiouſly embanked with quays ; and excellent Docks on its reſpective ſides are laid out ſufficiently capacious to hold ſeveral thouſand veſſels, and are reputed to be quite as large and convenient as thoſe of Liverpool, but far more beautiful. The Cuſtom-houſe on the north ſide of the river, is one of thoſe elegant ſtructures that few nations can boaſt, whether in point of beauty or its convenient adaptation to the purpoſes of commerce. We do not believe that any building of the kind in Europe, can hold a compariſon with it, and certainly it exhibits no indifferent ſign of the flouriſhing ſtate of the country. Two Canals on the oppoſite ſides of the river, with which they immediately communicate, have been carried to a great extent : the ſouthern navigation extends upwards of 40 Iriſh miles, to the river Barrow ; and a branch of this canal is carrying on in a weſtern direction towards the Shannon : the northern canal has alſo for its object to communicate with the latter river in the county of Longford ; and by a collateral cut, to unite with the Boyne navigation. At Dublin, the river is croſſed by ſeven bridges, of which that called Iſland-Bridge, lately rebuilt, ſtands as a monument of national taſte, and may juſtly be called the Iriſh Rialto, forming one grand arch that ſweeps in a beautiful and well proportioned direction from north to ſouth, extending 356 feet : the arch is an Ellipſis, whoſe cord or ſpan meaſures 104 feet, being 12 feet wider than the celebrated Rialto at Venice. The key-ſtone is 22 feet above high-water mark, and its breadth on the top within the parapets or plinths, 38 feet, including two flagged foot-ways, of ſix feet on each ſide. Eſſex bridge deſerves the ſecond notice, not for its antiquity, but for the excellence of its architecture ; having about the year 1753 been rebuilt after the model of Weſtminſter bridge, every ſtone of the former being in exact conformity and proportion with thoſe of the latter. Inſtead of the old Daniſh wall, the city is ſurrounded by a circular road, whoſe circumference is about 8 Engliſh miles : the houſes within the road are ſuppoſed to be 15,000, occupied by 460,000 inhabitants. Dublin has four capital ſquares, Merrion and Stephen's-Green on the ſouth of the river, Rutland and Mountjoy on the north : to theſe may be added a fifth at the weſt of the city, called The Baſon, which is terraced all round, and planted with limes, elms, &c. that encloſe ſeveral green walks beautifully laid out, from whence a proſpect is commanded of rich and elegant ſcenery. The water that ſupplies this reſervoir is conveyed from the mountains, and is always unfailing. Merrion-ſquare, though not yet entirely finiſhed, affords a juſt idea of the opulence and ſplendour of Dublin. Stephen's-Green, firſt laid out about 150 years ago, is ſuppoſed to be the largeſt ſquare in Europe : but it wants uniformity, ſeveral of the houſes being very ſtately and ſuperb, while others do not enjoy that advantage. Its circumference is an Engliſh mile, encloſing a ſpacious lawn, in the middle of which ſtands an excellent equeſtrian Statue, in braſs, of George II. by Van Noſt. When the franchiſes of the city had uſed to be perambulated, the ſeveral corporations aſſembled round this Statue, where they met the lord mayor, and proceeded from thence through the Liberties ; but this ceremony has been diſcontinued ſince the year 1779. The city contains 20 pariſhes, that have 18 churches, and ſome chapels of eaſe. Dublin is the ſee of an archbiſhop, erected in the year 1152 : it was a biſhopric in the 7th century, and in the year 1214, the biſhopric of Glandelough, which was ſounded in the 6th century, was incorporated with Dublin. The ſee of Dublin has two cathedrals, both within the city; Chriſt's-church, or the church of the Bleſſed Trinity, was firſt built by Sitricus, the ſon of Amlave, king of the Oſtmen of Dublin, and Donat, then biſhop of Dublin, about the year 1038. Its ſituation is nearly in the middle of the city, and the whole building very ſpacious and ornamental, containing a vaſt number of ſuperb and curious monuments, particularly that of Strongbow, which ſtill continues in good preſervation. This church was founded for regular canons, and converted into a collegiate for a dean and chapter by Henry VIII. in the year 1541. The other cathedral, that of St. Patrick, was founded for 13 prebendaries, which number has ſince been encreaſed to 22. This cathedral, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the city, was erected about the year 1190, by John Comyn, then archbiſhop of Dublin. In its firſt conſtitution it was collegiate, but De Loundres, Comyn's ſucceſſor, erected it into a cathedral. In the year 1370, archbiſhop Minot added to it a high ſteeple of ſquared ſtone: and in 1750, doctor Sterne, biſhop of Clogher, on this ſteeple erected a lofty and beautiful ſpire, little inferior to that of Saliſbury. This cathedral contains ſeveral excellent monuments, among which that of dean Swift, a name ſo dear to the Iriſh nation, claims pre-eminent regard. The beauty and magnificence of this cathedral, ſtand unrivalled in Ireland. The univerſity was firſt projected about the year 1311, but had ſcarce an exiſtence till the reign of Elizabeth, who granted it a charter. James, her ſucceſſor, endowed it with conſiderable eſtates in the province of Ulſter; and in that province alone it is reputed to poſſeſs 130,000 acres. Charles I. was again its benefactor, and aboliſhing the old ſtatutes, gave it others with a new charter. It conſiſts of a chancellor, vice-chancellor, provoſt, vice-provoſt, 22 fellows, and 70 ſcholars on the foundation. It has five royal profeſſorſhips, divinity, common law, civil law, phyſic, and Greek. In addition to theſe, ſir Patrick Dunn founded three others of phyſic, pharmacy, and chirurgery. There are likewiſe profeſſorſhips of aſtronomy, mathematics, and natural philoſophy, of the Iriſh and Oriental languages, of oratory, and of hiſtory. The number of ſtudents, including the 70 on the foundation, are uſually about 300. The building is very noble, conſiſting within of two large quadrangles, that have a well-deſigned library, laid out for holding 44000 volumes: its length exceeds 200 feet. The old chapel has lately been taken down, and on the north ſide of the outward ſquare, a new one of uncommon beauty erected at the expence of government. In this ſquare is a muſæum, and beyond the inner, a handſome printing-office. At the eaſt end is a delightful park, or Lycæum, for the recreation of the ſtudents. The provoſt has an excellent houſe of the Doric order, with extenſive gardens; and about four miles north-weſt of the city, a beautiful obſervatory has lately been erected on a convenient hill for that purpoſe, with an Engliſh profeſſor. This building altogether is extremely grand; its front, which is of the Corinthian order, and of Portland ſtone, meaſuring upwards of 300 feet, and having all the appearance of a palace: and indeed when we conſider the vaſt endowments of this college, being by far the richeſt in Europe, or perhaps in the world, it may well be called a Royal Foundation. Weſtward of the college ſtands the parliament-houſe, fronted with a grand arcade of Ionic columns, all of Portland ſtone, and ſo exquiſitely graceful that it is ſuppoſed to have no rival. But a late addition to its eaſtern-ſide, has in the opinion of the beſt judges, contributed but little to encreaſe its original beauty: yet even with this defect, it would not diſgrace the beſt architecture of ancient Greece or Rome. That part of the building where the commons ſate, was deſtroyed by fire about ſeven or eight years ago; but another commons-houſe has ſince riſen from its aſhes, of equal or perhaps ſuperior elegance: the form is a polygon, with an amphitheatrical gallery for ſtrangers to hear the debates in. At the top of this magnificent room is a grand dome, that riſes above the building in a juſt elevation. The room where the lords ſit, has nothing remarkable either for its ſize or its ſtructure: but the Britiſh Empire does not boaſt, nor Europe itſelf poſſeſs, a ſenatorial-hall ſo worthy of a great nation. This building does honor to the adminiſtration of lord Carteret, in whoſe time the firſt ſtone was laid. The caſtle is an ancient fortreſs, built in 1205, originally moated and flanked with ſeveral towers, having a draw-bridge, portcullis, &c. Of theſe towers the ſtrongeſt and moſt famed was that called Birmingham Tower, from ſir William Birmingham, and Walter his ſon, who there ſuffered a long impriſonment about the year 1331. This tower had then, and for a long time after, been uſed as a ſtate-priſon; but in 1775 was taken down, a new one being erected on its ſite: it is now principally uſed for preſerving the archives of the kingdom. In this fortreſs the courts of juſtice uſually ſate, and occaſionally the parliaments. Queen Elizabeth having ſettled Ireland, repaired and beautified it, converting it into a royal reſidence, for which purpoſe it has ſince been chiefly uſed, exceeding in point of beauty either St. James's or Kenſington palace: and indeed it has loſt much of its ancient ſtrength, aſſuming a more graceful form, better adapted to the times of peace and tranquillity. It has two courts, the upper and the lower: the ſeveral offices of ſtate are kept here, the treaſury, ordnance, war, ſecretaries, &c. with an arſenal and armoury for 40,000 men. The Royal Exchange, which adjoins the Caſtle, was finiſhed in the year 1779; the firſt ſtone of it was laid by lord Townſend, in 1769, then lord lieutenant. It is ſomewhat ſingular, that the ſame ſum, expended in the very ſame given period of years, from 1729 to 1739, erected that noble ſtructure, the Parliament Houſe. Yet this ſuperb pile, that had coſt the city the immenſe ſum of 40,000l. does not poſſeſs all thoſe advantages which the merchants expected from it. But a new ſtructure lately erected in Dame-ſtreet, called "The Commercial Buildings," and raiſed by private ſubſcription, it is thought will obviate moſt of the inconveniencies of the preſent Exchange. This laſt erection, however, which is extremely elegant, is more immediately intended for a Stock-Exchange, Brokers' Sales, Ship-Inſurance, &c.; the preſent place for tranſacting theſe ſpecies of buſineſs being highly incommodious. Beſides the Royal Hoſpital of Kilmainham, and the Royal Military Infirmary, with the Hibernian and Marine Societies, for maintaining and educating the children of ſoldiers and ſeamen, and the Charter-ſchool, near Clontarf, this city contains no leſs than 23 Charitable Inſtitutions, moſt of them of private endowment: a proof of the vaſt humanity of the Iriſh! Theſe inſtitutions are adapted to every ſituation and every age of life, inſomuch that no city can boaſt greater examples of attention to all the objects of diſtreſs. The Royal College of Phyſicians was eſtabliſhed in 1679, that of Surgeons in 1785. The Royal or Kilmainham Hoſpital was erected by Charles II. about the year 1684, for the reception of invalid and ſuperannuated Soldiers. It is generally full, and is calculated to hold 300 of theſe deſerving ſervants of their country. The building is well adapted for the purpoſe, and ſtands on the ſouth ſide of the river, commanding an advantageous elevation: viewed from the Phœnix-park, whoſe wall originally encloſed it, it has an admirable effect. This Hoſpital was the ſecond eleemoſynary inſtitution, the Blue-coat Hoſpital in 1670, being the firſt founded in Dublin; and, indeed, the continual wars and conteſts in which Ireland from time immemorial had been engaged, may account for that humane people not ſooner eſtabliſhing inſtitutions that are always the works of peace. The Barracks founded in 1706, at the expence of the Crown, are ſuppoſed to be the largeſt and handſomeſt in Europe. In times of peace, four battalions of foot, and one regiment of horſe, are generally garriſoned here. It conſiſts of four open and ſpacious courts, whoſe elevated ſituation is at once healthy, and commands a fine proſpect. The new Courts of Juſtice on the ſame ſide of the river, are extremely noble and convenient: the building is of a circular form; and within, the upper part of the dome is ornamented with the buſts of the moſt celebrated legiſlators, ancient and modern, adorned at the ſame time with ſculptured devices, appropriate and executed in a maſterly ſtyle. A range of Law-offices, finiſhed in a ſtriking manner, completes this beautiful edifice. The whole preſents from without a ſtructure that in its kind has ſeldom been excelled: but its effect is ſomewhat ſpoiled by ſtanding too cloſe upon the river. A new Seſſion-houſe, near the New-Priſon, has alſo been lately erected, and the Tholſel, of courſe, where criminal matters were uſed to be tried, ſerves now principally for the tranſaction of city buſineſs; the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Common-Council, making this their place of meeting. The Play-houſe has been much improved and beautified: and Leinſter Houſe, the manſion of the Duke of that name, is the nobleſt city reſidence in the Britiſh dominions. The Linen-hall is a neat elegant building, erected in the year 1728, for the purpoſe of detecting frauds in this the grand manufacture of the kingdom. It is of great national utility, the chief officers of ſtate and other principal perſons being the guardians and truſtees of this ſtaple branch of the Iriſh trade. To this may be added the ſilk, woollen, and worſted manufactures, eſtabliſhed in this city, and of late highly improved. The Phœnix-park, at the weſt end of the city, was formerly part of the lands of the monaſtery of St. John of Jeruſalem. It is an extenſive royal encloſure, ſeven miles in circuit, diverſified with woodland, champaign, and riſing ground, the whole well ſtocked with deer; and beſides the Hibernian-ſchool and Powder-magazine, with a battery of cannon, that commands the city, is adorned with the Viceroy's elegant villa, the ſeat of the principal Secretary, and thoſe of ſome others. A great number of uſeful and handſome fountains, for the health ahd convenience of the citizens, are diſpoſed in different parts of the town. The civil government of the city is executed by a Lord Mayor, Recorder, two Sheriffs, 24 Aldermen, and a Common-council, formed of repreſentatives from the 25 corporations. The Mayor tries all offences, even capital ones, except murder and treaſon, and matters of property for any ſum under 20l. A new police, eſtabliſhed by act of Parliament, under ſuperintendant-juſtices, with a chief conſtable, the whole forming a body of about five hundred foot, called watch-men, protects the city, as well by day as by night, a ſufficient number of theſe being conſtantly on guard. Such is the police of Dublin: and ſuch a city deſerves all the protection that power and the laws can give it. Dublin is ſeated 60 miles W. of Holyhead in Wales, and 330 NW. of London. Long. 6. 30. DUMBARTON, or Lenox, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north by the counties of Argyle and Perth, on the eaſt by the counties of Perth and Stirling, on the ſouth by Lanerkſhire and Renfrewſhire, and on the weſt by Argyleſhire, from which it is for the moſt part divided by Loch Long, in the form of a creſcent, the horns lying north and ſouth, and the concave ſide to the eaſt; about 45 miles in length, and from 6 to 15 in breadth. The eaſtern part is fertile in corn, the other parts feed great flocks of ſheep; but the principal riches ariſe from the fiſheries in the lochs in and about its coaſts. Loch Lomond, Loch Long, and Loch Garte are the chief; the principal town is Dumbarton. It ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament.

DUMBARTON, a town of Scotland, and capital of Dumbartonſhire, ſituated on the north coaſt of the Clyde, at the mouth of the Leven. It is ancient, large, but not well built, and defended by a caſtle, ſituated cloſe to the river, on a vaſt rock, formerly deemed impregnable, and now the reſidence of a garriſon. There is in this town a conſiderable crown and bottle glaſs manufacture, which employs upwards of 100 hands. Extenſive print-fields in the neighbouring pariſhes alſo employ ſome of the inhabitants of Dumbarton. This town was erected into a royal burgh by king Alexander II. in 1221; it has a good harbour, where large brigs lie ſafe in all weathers. About 2000 tons of ſhipping belong to this place, which employ 70 ſeamen. The town is entirely free of all impoſts, or borough taxes; but is by no means in a flouriſhing or increaſing ſtate, owing to the letters of deaconry preventing ſtrangers from working at their trades without coſtly entries; the number of ſouls is about 2000: 13 miles W. Glaſgow, and 8 NW. Paiſley. Long. 1. 27. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 55. 58. N.

DUMBLANE, a town of Scotland, in the county of Perth, formerly the ſee of a biſhop, founded by David I.; part of the cathedral, which yet remains, ſerves for a pariſh church. In the year 1715, a battle was fought near this town, between the troops of George I. under the command of the duke of Argyle, and the troops of the chevalier prince Charles, under the command of the earl of Mar. About 500 men were killed on each ſide, but the victory was doubtful: 4 miles N. Stirling, and 21 SW. Perth.

DUMFRIES, a county of Scotland; bounded on the north by the counties of Lanerk, Peebles, and Selkirk, on the eaſt by Roxburgſhire, on the ſouth by the Frith of Solway, which divides it from England, and the county of Kircudbright, and on the weſt by Airſhire. The country is generally mountainous, with ſome fertile vallies on the ſides of the rivers called Nithſdale, or Niddiſdale, Annandale, and Eſkdale; about 50 miles in length, and from 10 to 30 broad. The principal towns are Dumfries and Annan, and the chief rivers are the Eſk, the Annan, and the Nid. It ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament.

DUMFRIES, a town of Scotland, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on an eminence, near the river Nid, about ten miles from its mouth, in the Solway Frith, with a reſpectable grammar-ſchool, and an infirmary. It is a royal borough, and aſſiſts, with ſome other towns, to ſend a member to the Britiſh parliament. About eight or ten coaſting veſſels belong to this town, beſides two or three which are employed in the Baltic, and in the wine trade. Forty years ago, a conſiderable tobacco trade was carried on at Dumfries. At an average of four years, 1250 hogſheads were then annually imported. It is alledged, that the importation was conſiderably greater, and that in conſequence of the detection of ſome attempts at ſmuggling, the trade in this article came to be diſcouraged. The coaſting veſſels bring in lime, coals, and merchant goods of various ſorts; they export potatoes and grain. About a mile eaſtward from the town is a craig, or rock, curiouſly hollowed, known by the name of the Maiden-bower Crag. It is ſaid to have been famous in the times of Druidiſm; and may have received its name from being the ſcene of ſome rites practiſed as a teſt of virginity. The preſent population of the town, as appears from an enumeration lately taken, may be fairly eſtimated at 5600 ſouls: 21 miles NE. Kircudbright, and 53 SSW. Edinburgh. Long. 4. 25. W. DUNDEE, a large and flouriſhing ſea-port town of Scotland, in the county of Angus, ſituated on a ſmall river on the north ſide of the Frith of Tay, which is here between two and three miles wide. The harbour is good, and capable of receiving veſſels of 300 tons: in the year 1792, there were 116 veſſels belonging to the port, navigated by 698 men, and meaſuring $8550\frac{1}{2}$ tons. Of theſe, 34 were employed in the foreign, and 78 in the coaſting trade, and 4 in the whale fiſhery. The chief manufactures are glaſs, coarſe linen, ſail-cloth, cordage, thread, buckram, tanned leather, ſhoes, hats, &c.; a ſugar houſe has lately been erected with conſiderable ſucceſs. The number of inhabitants is about 22,000. In the latter end of Auguſt, 1651, Dundee, which was held by the royaliſts, under the command of general Lumſdaine, was ſummoned to ſurrender by general Monk, who commanded the parliament forces; and, on the governor's refuſal, was taken by ſtorm on the 1ſt of September. According to the account publiſhed at the time, the governor was killed, with between 7 and 800 ſoldiers and townſmen, and fourſcore women. The town was given up to be plundered by the ſoldiers and ſeamen. There were at the time about 100 ſhips in the harbour, about 40 pieces of ordnance, many arms, and ſtore of ammunition : 30 miles N. DUNKIRK, or Dunkerque, a ſeaport of France, in the department of the North, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Bergues. It was only a ſmall village, inhabited by fiſhermen, till St. Eloy, biſhop of Noyon, built a church there in the 7th century. In the year 980, it was ſurrounded with walls, by Baldwin III. ſirnamed the Young, count of Flanders, and many inhabitants induced to reſide there by particular privileges and immunities granted them by him and his ſucceſſors. In the year 1388, it was burned by the Engliſh. In the year 1558, it was taken by the French, but retaken by the Spaniards in the year 1585. In the year 1646, it was taken by the French, aſſiſted by the navy of Holland, commanded by Van Trump. It was retaken by the archduke Leopold in 1652. In the year 1658, it was again taken by the French, and ceded to England by a treaty made with Oliver Cromwell ; but when Charles II. ſold it to France, in the year 1662, for 5,000,000 of livres, Louis XIV. made it one of the ſtrongeſt places in Europe, and rendered the harbour commodious. By an article of the treaty of peace ſigned at Utrecht, it was agreed, that all the fortifications ſhould be demoliſhed, and the harbour filled up. This article was renewed in every ſubſequent peace, till the peace of 1783, after the American war. Since that time the harbour has again been cleared, and the fortifications repaired. In the year 1694, Sir Cloudeſly Shovel bombarded Dunkirk, but after having thrown in 1200 bombs, retired without having done any conſiderable damage. In the year 1793, the Engliſh army, under the duke of York, attempted to beſiege it, but were compelled to retire. It is the moſt important town and harbour on the whole coaſt, and having been declared a free port, had a great deal of commerce. By means of a ſluice 42 feet wide, the baſon within the town will hold 40 ſhips of the line always floating. Dunkirk is divided into Old and New Town, the number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 80,000 : 36¾ poſts N. Paris. Long. 20. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 2. N.

DURHAM, a county of England ; bounded on the north by Northumberland, on the eaſt by the German Sea, on the ſouth by Yorkſhire, from which it is divided by the river Tees, and on the weſt by Weſtmoreland and Cumberland. Its ſhape is triangular, is about 107 miles in circumference, and divided into four wards, which contain one city, nine towns, and about 100,000 inhabitants. It is uſually called the Biſhopric of Durham, or the County Palatine of Durham, from the great power poſſeſſed by the biſhops, who were formerly ſovereign princes in their dioceſe. The palatine right of the biſhops of Durham is founded on immemorial preſcription, and proceeded at firſt from a principle of devotion to St. Cuthbert, that whatever lands were given to him, or bought with his money, he ſhould hold with the ſame freedom as the princes held the reſt of their eſtates. But the act 27 Henry VIII. for there continuing of certain liberties taken from the crown, directs, that all writs, indictments, and all manner of proceſs in counties palatine, ſhall be made only in the king's name ; ſince which time all the difference in the ſtyle of proceedings in this county from others is, that the teſte of the writ is in the name of the biſhop, according to the directions of that act. Still he is perpetual juſtice of peace within his territories (and can ſit only as ſuch) as is alſo his temporal chancellor, becauſe the chief acts of the exempt juriſdiction uſed to run through his court. All the officers of the courts, even the judges of aſſize themſelves, have ſtill their ancient ſalaries, or ſomething analogous, from the biſhop, and all the ſtanding officers of the courts are conſtituted by his patents. When he comes in perſon to any of the courts of judicature, he ſits chief in them, thoſe of aſſize not excepted, and even when judgment of blood is given : though the canons forbid any clergyman to be preſent, the biſhops of Durham did and may ſit in their purple robes on the ſentence of death. All dues, amercements, and forfeited recogniſances in the courts of the palatinate, and all deodands, belong to the biſhop. If any forfeits are made, either of war or by treaſon, outlawry, or felony, even though the ſoil be the king's, they fall to the biſhop here, as to the king in other places. All the tenures of land here originate from the biſhop, as lord paramount in chief. Hence he grants charters for erecting boroughs and incorporations, markets and fairs ; incloſing foreſts, chaces, and warrens ; licences to embattle caſtles, build chapels, found chantries and hoſpitals, and diſpenſations with the ſtatute of mortmain. All incloſed eſtates, as well as moors, or waſtes, to which no title can be made eſcheat, to him. He grants the cuſtody of idiots and lunatics, and had the cuſtody of minors while the cuſtom of wards and liveries ſubſiſted. Beſides the dependance of leaſehold or copyhold tenants on him, if any freeholders alienated their land without his licence, they were obliged to ſue out his patent of pardon ; and all money paid for ſuch licences belongs to him. In the article of military power, the biſhop of Durham had anciently his thanes, and afterwards his barons, who held of him by knight's ſervice, as the reſt of the hailwerk folk held of them by inferior tenures. On alarms he convened them as a parliament, with advice to aſſiſt with their perſons, dependants, and money, for the public ſervice at home and abroad, and all levies of men or money were made by the biſhop's commiſſion, or by writs in his name out of the chancery at Durham ; for he had power both to coin money and levy taxes, and raiſe and arm ſoldiers in the biſhopric from 16 to 60 years old. But now the militia of this county has been long on the ſame footing with the reſt of the kingdom under the lord-lieutenant. The only difference here is, that that office has generally, though not always, been borne by the biſhop. The admiralty juriſdiction in this county belongs alſo to the biſhop, who holds the proper courts by his judges, and appoints by his patents a vice admiral, regiſter, and marſhal, or water bailiff, and other officers, and has the privileges, forfeitures, and profits, incident to this power, as royal fiſhes, ſea wrecks, duties for ſhips arriving in his ports, &c. This county, for its ſize, is, perhaps, one of the moſt hilly in the kingdom, the hills are, in general, covered with verdure to the top, and many of them contain lead and iron ores, coals, lime-ſtone, free-ſtone, marble, &c. The eaſt and north-eaſt parts of the county are particularly rich in coal mines, lying in horizontal ſtrata from three to ſix feet thick, and extending many miles through the country. Near Wolſingham are found beautiful black ſpottled marble, and the large grey mill-ſtone for grinding corn. Grind-ſtones are found a little to the ſouth of the river Tyne, and not far from Newcaſtle ; theſe form an article of exportation to moſt parts of the habitable globe. There are alſo ſeveral quarries of fire-ſtone, immenſe quantities of which are exported to be uſed in ovens, furnaces, &c. Near the river Tees the land is rich, conſiſting of a loamy, rich clay, and is generally fertile near the other rivers ; other parts are not ſo good. The climate is very uncertain, and the harveſt hazardous ; wheat, barley, oats, and peas, are the chief productions ; beans are ſeldom raiſed in the weſtern part of the county. The principal manufactures are tammies, carpets, huckaback, cotton in various forms, ſail-cloths, ſalt, ſteel, glaſs, ropes, pottery, iron works, iron founderies, copperas, paper, &c. Durham is the capital. The towns are Stockton, Sunderland, Barnard Caſtle, Darlington, Stanhope, Hartlepool, Biſhops Auckland, Wolſingham, and Sedgefield. The principal rivers are the Tees, the Tyne, the Derwent, the Skern, and the Wear. Four members are only returned to parliament, viz. two for the county, and two for the city.

DURHAM, a city of England, and capital of the county of the ſame name, ſituated on ſeven hills, and ſurrounded by others more lofty, has been whimſically compared to a crab, the body being repreſented by the centre of the town, the cathedral, &c. and the claws, by the ſeveral ſtreets branching every way. It is almoſt ſurrounded and interſected every way by the river Wear. This city is generally ſaid to have been founded in the year 995, when the monks of Landisfarne, to avoid the Danes, took up their reſidence here, and brought with them the relics of St. Cuthbert. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of York, who is lord paramount of the county, and earl of Segberg. The dioceſe extends over the counties of Durham and Northumberland. The cathedral is a grand Gothic building, and has lately undergone a thorough repair. The city contains about 2000 houſes, and about 9000 inhabitants. The caſtle is ſuppoſed to have been built by ſome Engliſh, as a protection againſt William the Norman, and ſtrengthened and enlarged by him. Beſides the cathedral, there are ſix other pariſh churches. A new charter of corporation was granted by biſhop Egerton to remedy ſome material defects in the old one, by which the government of the city is now veſted in a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, town-clerk, and twenty-four common-council men. The city returns two members to the Britiſh parliament. Near Durham a ſignal victory was obtained by the Engliſh over the Scots, when king David Bruce was taken priſoner by an Engliſhman, of the name of Copeland, who refuſed to deliver him to queen Philippa, till commanded by Edward I. who was at that time at Calais, and who juſtified his refuſal : 120 miles S. EDDYSTONE ROCKS, well known to ſeamen who navigate the Engliſh Channel. They lie nearly in the fair way from the Start to the Lizard, and are, therefore, an object of the utmoſt importance to mariners. Hence it is, that on the ſummit of the largeſt rock a light-houſe has been erected, to ſerve as a beacon, or ſignal, to avoid the danger, as they are covered with a flood tide, but become dry at the ebb. The firſt light-houſe was erected in 1696, and reſiſted many violent ſtorms, but was blown down on the 27th of November, 1703, in which the projector, who then happened to be in it, and all his attendants, periſhed. The corporation of the Trinity Houſe afterwards erected another in 1709, and, to ſupport the expence, laid a duty on all veſſels paſſing it. This was burnt down in 1755, and rebuilt by Mr. Smeaton, within four years afterwards ; this alſo was burnt down in 1770, and rebuilt in 1774. The building, as it is now conſtructed, conſiſts of four rooms, one over the other, and at the top, a gallery and lantern. The ſtone floors are flat above, but concave beneath, and are kept from preſſing againſt the ſides of the building by a chain let into the walls. Portland ſtone and granite are united together by a ſtrong cement, and let into horizontal ſteps by dove tails on the ſouth-weſt. The ingenious architect diſcovered that Portland ſtone was likely to be deſtroyed by a marine animal, and as the working of granite was very expenſive and laborious, the external part only was conſtructed with this, and the internal part with the other. To form a ſtrong and broad baſe, and a ſtrong bulk of matter to reſiſt the waves, the foundation is one entire ſolid maſs of ſtones to the height of 35 feet, engrafted into each other, and united by every means of additional ſtrength. It is about 80 feet in height : 5 leagues SSW. Plymouth, and 45 E. Lizard Point. Long. 4. 16. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 8. N.

EDIKOFEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and palatinate of the Rhine, where a battle was fought between the Pruſſians and the French on the 12th of July, 1794 ; the conteſt was long and bloody, but the victory doubtful : the French general, Laboiſſiere, by venturing too far, was taken priſoner : the battle was renewed the next day, and ended in favour of the republicans : 4 miles N. Landau.

EDINBURGH, a city of Scotland, capital of the kingdom and of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on three hills, about 2 miles from the Frith of Forth. The middle hill, which is narrow and ſteep, is occupied by the Old Town, the houſes of which are generally lofty, even to the extraordinary height of ſeven to eleven, and in ſome inſtances even to fourteen, ſtories. From the caſtle, which ſtands on the weſtern point of the hill, extends a broad ſtreet a mile long. On each ſide of this hill the buildings divide each way in narrow lanes towards the north and ſouth, ſouth. The hill on which the Old Town is ſituated, had once a lake on each ſide, towards the north and the ſouth, now both built over. The Old Town is continued to the ſouthern hill, with bridges of communication between. No place, perhaps, has received a more rapid encreaſe and improvement within theſe few years than Edinburgh. The New Town is built entirely of ſtone, with conſiderable taſte, on the northern hill, and conſiſts of a number of ſtreets, built in ſtraight lines, and interſected with handſome ſquares. Edinburgh was erected into a biſhopric, by king Charles I. in the year 1633, under the archbiſhopric of St. Andrew. The city was firſt fortified and walled in the year 1450, in the reign of James II.; ſome of the walls are yet remaining. In the centre of the city ſtands St. Giles's church, or the cathedral, which was made collegiate by James III.; the four quarters of whoſe croſs were converted into four diſtinct pariſh churches; of which the choir, or New church, makes the principal church in the city; the centre is called the Old church; the ſouth-weſt quarter the Tolbooth church; and the north-weſt Haddo's Hole church, from ſir John Gordon, of Haddo, having been confined in it till his execution, 1642, for holding out his caſtle of Haddo for Charles I. In other parts of this church the general aſſembly and the convention of royal burghs meet; ſeveral clerks have their offices, and one room is uſed as the city cartulary. The univerſity of Edinburgh was founded in the year 1582, by queen Mary and James VI. and has riſen to an eminent degree of reputation. The profeſſors have ſmall ſalaries, and are claſſed into divinity, phyſic, law, and arts and ſciences. The number of ſtudents in the different profeſſions is eſtimated at a thouſand, of whom 400 ſtudy phyſic. The degrees beſtowed by the univerſity of Edinburgh are doctor of divinity, of law, and phyſic, and maſter of arts. In the year 1681, a charter was granted by Charles II. for a royal college of phyſicians at Edinburgh, which was ratified by parliament. The univerſity ſtands on the ſouth ſide of the town, with houſes for the profeſſors, a hall, library, and public ſchools; the ſtudents lodge in the town. The city was originally comprehended in one pariſh, and the miniſters had manſes in the Parliament Cloſe, till James VI. divided it into eight pariſhes, with a miniſter to each. The ancient royalty, independent of the ſuburbs, was afterwards, in 1625, divided into four, and the town into ſix, in 1641, but the whole ancient royalty is now conſidered as one diſtrict, called the pariſh of St. Giles; and, upon the enlargement of the city, the extended royalty was annexed to the ſame pariſh. There is but one pariſh in Edinburgh to this day. The eaſt ſide of the ſquare above, now the governor's houſe, was anciently royal apartments, built in 1556 and 1616; and in one of them, a ſmall mean room, James VI. was born, June 19, 1566. State priſoners are confined here; and here are, or were, kept the regalia of Scotland, never ſeen ſince 1707. Near the cathedral is the parliament houſe, finiſhed in 1640, with courts adjoining, and over it for the ſheriff and commiſſary, the town council, and criminal cauſes, the exchequer, and the room for the aſſembly of the royal boroughs. The Tolbooth, originally built by the citizens, in 1561, for the accommodation of the parliament and courts of juſtice, and for the confinement of debtors and malefactors, is now unfit for any of theſe purpoſes, and has been uſed ever ſince 1640 only for a gaol. Other public buildings are Herriot's Hoſpital, from a deſign of Inigo Jones, founded in the year 1628, for the orphan ſons of the freemen of Edinburgh; the regiſter office, the exchange, Watſon's Hoſpital, and ſeveral others; the public infirmary, theatre, exciſe-office, &c. The royal palace of Edinburgh, called Holyrood, was originally an abby, and converted into a palace by James V.; in it are contained pictures to repreſent the kings of Scotland from Fergus, 320 years before Chriſt, to the revolution. The city is governed by a lord provoſt, a dean of guild, and a guild-council, and 25 common-council, compoſed of merchants and tradeſmen. Here are 14 incorporated trades, each having its deacen, or warden. A conſtant guard of 75 men, in an uniform, are kept in the guard-houſe to patrole the ſtreets every night. Edinburgh is ſuppoſed to contain 100,000 inhabitants, and ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament: 378 miles N. London. Long. 3. 13. W. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 53. N.

EDINBURGHSHIRE, or Mid Lothian, a county of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth, on the eaſt by Haddingtonſhire, Berwickſhire, and Roxburgſhire, on the ſouth by Selkirkſhire, Peebleſhire, and Lanerkſhire, and on the weſt by Linlithgowſhire. Its form is nearly the ſegment of a circle, about 27 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 16 from north to ſouth, but in ſome places not above ſix. The ſoil is fertile, and produces corn of all ſorts with plenty of graſs for cattle; it contains mines of coal, copper, lime-ſtone, and black marble. The principal towns are Edinburgh, Dalkeith, Leith, and Muſſelburg: the principal rivers are the Eſk, the Leith, the Almond, and the Galla. It ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament.

EGYPT, a country of Africa; bounded on the north by the Mediterranean, on the eaſt by the Red Sea and the iſthmus of Suez, on the ſouth by mountains, which ſeparate it from Nubia, and on the weſt by the deſerts of Lybia. Its length from north to ſouth about 500 miles, its breadth about 160. Egypt is divided into Upper and Lower, the former extending in a long and narrow valley from Syene to Grand Cairo. Two ridges of mountains form the outlines of Upper Egypt, running along each ſide of the Nile till, reaching Grand Cairo, the weſtern ridge takes its courſe towards Alexandria, the other towards the Red Sea; the former conſiſts of ſandy hills, the baſe of which is a calcareous ſtone, the other of ſtony rocks. Beyond theſe mountains, on each ſide are deſerts; between them lies a long plain, whoſe greateſt breadth is not more than nine leagues. In this valley rolls the Nile. Lower Egypt includes all the country between Cairo and the Mediterranean on the north and ſouth; and Lybia and the iſthmus of Suez to the eaſt and weſt; bounded by ſandy deſerts, it contains ſlips of land fertile and well cultivated on the borders of the river and canals, and in the centre, that tract which is called Delta, formed by the branches of the Nile. Some geographers divide Egypt into three parts, Upper, Middle, and Lower. The Upper Egypt was called by the Greeks Thebais, now Said, or Al Said, which extends from Syene to Manfalout; Middle Egypt, called by the Greeks Heptanomis, now Vostani; and Lower Egypt, the beſt part of which was the Delta, now called Bahira, or Rif. The Thebais took its name from Thebes, the capital, and once contained many more cities; the other parts of Egypt contained a great number of magnificent and populous cities. The fertility of Egypt, and the excellence of its productions and fruits, are greatly celebrated by ancient writers, and by Moſes himſelf, who muſt needs have been well acquainted with this country. It abounds in grain of all ſorts, but particularly rice; inſomuch, that, as it was formerly the granary of Rome, while ſubject to the Roman empire, it is now the principal country which ſupplies Conſtantinople. The moſt plentiful parts of Egypt are the Delta, and that province which is now called Al Fayoum, ſuppoſed to be the ancient Heracleotic name, the capital of which, bearing the ſame name, is thought to have been either Heracleopolis, Nilopolis, or Arſinoe, and is ſaid by the natives to have been built by Joſeph, to whom they own themſelves obliged for the improvements of this territory; which being much the loweſt part of Egypt, was before nothing but a ſtanding pool, till that patriarch, by cutting canals, and particularly the great one, which reaches from the Nile to the Lake Mœris, drained it of the water, and clearing it of the ruſhes and marſhy weeds, rendered it fit for tillage. It is now the moſt fertile and beſt cultivated land in the whole kingdom, containing a great number of villages, and yields grapes and other fruits in abundance; and it fails not bearing even in thoſe years when the Nile not riſing to its uſual height occaſions a ſcarcity in the other parts of Egypt. There are ſtill eighty canals, like rivers, ſeveral of which are twenty, thirty, and forty leagues in length, receiving and diſtributing the inundations over the country. Except ſix, the others are almoſt all filled up, and are dry when the Nile is low. The grand lakes of Mœris, Bahira, and Mareotis, were vaſt reſervoirs to contain the ſuperabundant waters, and afterwards diſperſe them among the neighbouring plains. Beſides theſe reſervoirs, all the towns a little diſtance from the Nile are ſurrounded by ſpacious ponds, for the convenience of the inhabitants and agriculture. Twelve hundred years has this country been ſubjected to a people, who, not farmers themſelves, have ſuffered theſe great works to periſh, and the ignorance of its preſent government will complete their deſtruction. The limits of cultivated Egypt yearly decreaſe, and barren ſands every where accumulate. When the Turks conquered Egypt, in 1517, the Lake Mareotis was near the walls of Alexandria, and the canals through which its waters ran to that city was navigable. This lake has diſappeared, and the lands it watered, which, according to hiſtorians, produced corn, wine, and fruits in abundance, are become deſerts, where the melancholy traveller finds neither tree, ſhrub, nor verdure. The very canal, the work of Alexander, neceſſary for the ſubſiſtence of the city he had built, is almoſt filled up; it is dry except when the waters are at the higheſt point of inundation, and ſoon becomes ſo again. Population has equally ſuffered: ancient Egypt ſupplied food to eight millions of inhabitants, and to Italy and the neighbouring provinces likewiſe. At preſent, the eſtimate is not one-half. Seed-time differs according to the province, and the height of the ground. Near Syene, wheat and barley are ſown in October, and reaped in January. About Girge, the harveſt month is February, and March round Grand Cairo: ſuch is the general progreſs of the harveſt through the Said. There are many exceptions, according as the lands are high or low, more or leſs diſtant from the river. They ſow and reap all the year in Lower Egypt, wherever they can obtain the water of the river. The land is never fallow, and yields three harveſts annually; there the traveller inceſſantly beholds the charming proſpect of flowers, fruits, and corn; and ſpring, ſummer, and autumn, at once preſent their treaſures. Deſcending from the cataracts, at the beginning of January, the wheat is ſeen almoſt ripe; farther on it is in ear; and ſtill farther the fields are green. Lucerne is mowed three times between November and March, and is the only hay of Egypt, ſerving chiefly to fodder the cattle. The Egyptian art of hatching chickens is peculiar to themſelves. Their manner of raiſing bees is not leſs extraordinary, and beſpeaks great ingenuity. Upper Egypt preſerving its verdure only four or five months, the flowers and harveſt being ſeen no longer, the people of the Lower Egypt profit by this circumſtance, aſſembling on board large boats the bees of different villages. Each proprietor confides his hives, with his own mark, to the boatman, who, when loaded, gently proceeds up the river, and ſtops at every place where he finds verdure and flowers. The bees ſwarm from their cells at break of day and collect their nectar, returning ſeveral times loaded with booty, and, in the evening, re-enter their hives, without ever miſtaking their abode. Were heat the principle of diſeaſes, the Said would not be habitable; but it only ſeems to occaſion a burning fever, to which the inhabitants are ſubject, and which they cure by regimen, drinking much water, and bathing in the river; in other reſpects they are ſtrong and healthy. Old men are numerous; and many ride on horſeback at eighty. The food they eat in the hot ſeaſon much contributes to the preſervation of their health; it is chiefly vegetables, pulſe, and milk. They bathe frequently, eat little; ſeldom drink fermented liquors, and mix much lemon juice in their food. This abſtinence preſerves vigour to a very advanced age. The waters of the Nile are lighter, ſofter, and more agreeable to the taſte than almoſt any other. In Lower Egypt, the neighbourhood of the ſea, the large lakes, and the abundance of the waters, moderate the ſun's heat, and preſerve a delightful temperature. The greateſt torment of the inhabitants are the gnats and muſquitos, which, riſing by millions out of the marſhes, ſwarm in the air and the houſes. The handkerchief muſt be held in the hand all day. It is the firſt thing a viſitor receives, and at night it is neceſſary to ſleep under muſquiteros. Diſeaſes of the eyes are the commoneſt in Egypt, where the blind are numerous. Eight thouſand of theſe unfortunate people are decently maintained in the great moſque of Grand Cairo. The ſmall pox is very common in Egypt, without committing great ravages. As to pulmonary diſeaſes which in cold countries carry off ſo many in the prime of youth, they are unknown in this happy climate. The unhealthy ſeaſon in Egypt is from February till the end of May, the ſouth winds blow at intervals, and load the atmoſphere with a ſubtile duſt, which makes breathing difficult, and drive before them pernicious exhalations. Sometimes the heat becomes inſupportable, and the thermometer ſuddenly riſes twelve degrees. The inhabitants call this ſeaſon khamſin, fifty, becauſe theſe winds are moſt felt between Eaſter and Whitſuntide, during which they eat rice, vegetables, freſh fiſh, and fruits; bathing frequently, and uſing plenty of perfumes and lemon-juice, with which regimen they prevent the dangerous effects of the khamſin. A proof that the plague is not native in Egypt is, that, except in time of great famine, it never breaks out in Grand Cairo, nor the inland towns, but always begins at ſeaports, on the arrival of Turkiſh veſſels, and travels to the capital, whence it proceeds as far as Syene. Having come to a period in Grand Cairo, and being again introduced by the people of Upper Egypt, it renews with great fury, and ſometimes ſweeps off 2 or 300,000 ſouls; but always ſtops in the month of June, or thoſe who catch it then are always cured. This country was formerly infeſted with crocodiles and ſea-horſes, but they are now ſo much deſtroyed, that they are rarely ſeen below the cataracts, and never below Grand Cairo. The Ibis was a bird celebrated in Egypt for deſtroying ſerpents, but this bird is now become rare, and on the other hand ſtorks have multiplied. The Egyptian rat rather reſembles a ferret, but larger, is remarkable for deſtroying the crocodile's eggs. Among other animals are horſes, aſſes, mules, camels; in deſert places tygers, antelopes, foxes, hares, cows, ſheep, and deer. Here is a ſpecies of ape, larger, ſtronger, and more ſavage, than others, which the Greeks call cunocephalos, from the reſemblance which their head bears to that of a dog. Many cameleons are found in the neighbourhood of Grand Cairo; the lizards of Egypt are yellow. There are ſeveral ſpecies of vipers, one of which, the ceraſtus of the ancients, has horns. Among the plants which they cultivate are rice, wheat, barley, lupins, lentils, Turkey corn, millet, ſeſame, flax, beans, melons, ſugar canes, carthamus, coloquintida, &c. The ſplendid and magnificent ruins found every where in Egypt, give evident proofs of the enlightened underſtanding of the ancient inhabitants of this country, but the hiſtory is obſcure, and mixed with fables. Cambyſes, the Perſian, and his ſucceſſors, ravaged it for 200 years. This barbarous prince, by deſtroying the temples and colleges of the prieſts, extinguiſhed the ſacred fire they had kindled, during paſt ages, in this happy climate. While held in honour, they glorioully cultivated every kind of human knowledge; deſpiſed, they loſt both their ſcience and their genius. Governed by the Ptolemies, this genius revived not, becauſe fixing their reſidence at Alexandria, thoſe kings placed their confidence wholly in the Greeks, and diſdained the Egyptians. Become a Roman province, under Auguſtus, Egypt was held the granary of Italy; and agriculture and commerce only were encouraged. The ſovereigns of the lower empire having embraced Chriſtianity, governed it with a rod of iron, and overthrew ſome of its fineſt edifices. The Arabs conquered it from Heraclius, occupied by his theological diſputes and refuſing to ſend a ſingle ſhip to ſuccour Alexandria, though the inhabitants for the ſpace of a year, implored his aſſiſtance. The rich library was burnt; a ſubject of eternal regret to the learned of all countries and all ages. An ignorant and barbarous people were its laſt maſters; the Turks have, as much as in them lay, annihilated commerce, agriculture, and ſcience. From the middle of the 7th century to 1250, the Arabs were in poſſeſſion of Egypt, which then was a part of the vaſt empire of the caliphs. Vizirs governed it, in their name, and, poſſeſſed of unbounded power, exerciſed ſupreme authority. They had the right of life and death, and, rendering an account to the caliphs only of their conduct, governed the country according to their caprice. However great their tyranny, the cries of the oppreſſed people never could reach the throne; the vizirs took care to gain thoſe who ſurrounded it by rich preſents: The government being thus deſpotic, national happineſs, or miſery, depended on the virtues, or vices, of one man. Many of theſe vizirs ſwayed an iron ſceptre; ſome few made commerce, agriculture, and the arts flouriſh. Others, among whom was the famous Ebn Toulon, rebelled, and proclaimed themſelves kings, but the crown ſeldom deſcended to their children. After the death of the rebel, the province returned to the dominion of its former maſters. In the year 982, Moaz, ſovereign of the weſtern part of Africa, and deſcendant of the fatimite caliphs, who had founded a kingdom there two centuries before, ſent his generals to conquer Egypt, which having performed, he made it the ſeat of empire. His offspring reigned till 1189, when Salah Eddin eſtabliſhed the dynaſty of the Ayoubites there. The government of Salah Eddin, and his ſucceſſors, was monarchical, under whom Egypt became flouriſhing. The remains of the academies they founded, and to which, by their rich benefactions, they drew the learned men of the eaſt, are ſtill to be ſeen at Grand Cairo. In the year 1250, immediately after the defeat of Louis IX. the Baharite Mamluks, Turks by deſcent, maſſacred Touran Shah, the laſt prince of the Ayoubites, and the ſon of Nejem Eddin, their benefactor; with whom ended the reign of the Arabian princes over Egypt, and ſince which they have ever been governed by foreigners. The Baharite Mamluks changed its form of government, and made it republican. Their principal men elected a chief, to whom they confided great authority. He had a right to make war and peace, firſt adviſing with his council, the members of which they themſelves were. He could appoint miniſters, ambaſſadors, governors, and generals, provided he choſe them from among the Mamluks. Though the people had no part in the government, yet had the prince cauſe to fear their diſcontent: an ambitious rival, aided by them, might deprive him of his crown. Thus we ſee the chief of this republic was ſurrounded by dangers; the duration of his empire depended on his perſonal qualities; and he could not tranſmit his power to his children. Hence, during the hundred and thirty-ſix years the Baharite Mamluks governed Egypt, they had 27 kings; a proof their reigns were ſhort and tempeſtuous. About the middle of the fourteenth century, the Circaſſian Mamluks dethroned the Baharites, but preſerved their form of government, and continued in poſſeſſion of Egypt till the conqueſt of it by ſultan Selim, in 1517: ſultan Selim, having conquered Egypt, and overthrown the Circaſſian Mamluks, who could not withſtand the numerous armies and bloody battles of the Turkiſh emperor, cauſed their king, Thomam-Bey, to be hanged at one of the gates of Cairo. This barbarous action diſguſted them ſo much, that they only waited the departure of the Turks again to take to their arms. The intoxication of ſucceſs once diſſipated, Selim perceived his error, and, that he might profit by this important conqueſt, endeavoured to gain the good will of the Mamluks; in order to which he made very little change in their form of government. The government is now compoſed of a pacha, ſent from Conſtantinople, and 24 beys, or ſangiaks, who, being at the head of the provinces and the armies, in reality enjoy all the power; abſolute power is conſigned over to them, the pacha remains no longer than while he is ſubſervient to their deſigns; ſhould he dare to ſpeak in defence of his maſter's intereſt, or thoſe of the Egyptians, he becomes a ſtate criminal; the divan aſſembles, and he is expelled. The real native Egyptians are the Copts, theſe only are the deſcendants of the ancient Egyptians. Theſe people are among the firſt who embraced Chriſtianity, and were permitted by the Arabian conquerors the free exerciſe of their religion, ſince when they have ever had churches, prieſts, biſhops, and a patriarch, who reſides at Conſtantinople. Numerous ſuperſtitious practices are mingled with their worſhip; but they are gentle, friendly, and humane. Inland trade, hatching eggs, and the art of raiſing bees, is almoſt the whole of their knowledge. The Arabs conſtitute two thirds of the preſent inhabitants of Egypt, but of different manners; ſome, who inhabit the banks of the Nile, are generally thieves and pirates; others, governed by their ſheiks, who poſſeſs various principalities in Upper Egypt, are good people, incapable of diſguiſe, without falſehood or knavery; haughty, but generous and hoſpitable. Another ſpecies of Arabs are the wandering Bedouins, who have no fixed reſidence. The Mograbians, or weſtern Mahometans, are, after the Copts and Arabs, the moſt numerous inhabitants of Egypt; they devote themſelves, ſome to arms, and others to trade. There are but few Turks, excluſive of Janiſſaries and Aſſabs; the other inhabitants are Syrians, Greeks, and Jews, to which may be added European merchants; the amount of the whole about four millions. The principal towns are Cairo, Alexandria, Damietta, and Syene.

ENGHIEN, or Enghuien, a town of the Netherlands, in the county of Hainaut : 8 miles ENE. Ath, and 30 NNE. Valenciennes.

ENGIA, an iſland near the coaſt of the Morea, in a gulf to which it gives name; anciently called Egina, Oenone, and Myrmidonia, which laſt name it obtained from the activity and induſtry of the inhabitants, compared to ants : about 10 leagues in circumference; but rendered by rocks nearly inacceſſible, except on the north-weſt. It has no harbours. It has one town which contains about 800 houſes, and in it are ſeen the remains of a temple dedicated to Venus, and of another dedicated to Jupiter : 25 miles SSW. Athens. Long. 41. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 42. N.

ENGIA, a gulf on the ſouth-eaſt coaſt of European Turkey, ſo called from the iſland ſituated in it, about 60 miles in length from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt, and 25 wide at the mouth.

ENGLAND, a country of Europe, which forms the principal part of the kingdom and iſland of Great Britain; bounded on the north by Scotland, on the eaſt by the German Ocean, on the ſouth by the Engliſh Channel, and on the weſt by the Atlantic, Wales, and the Iriſh Sea. It extends from 50. to 55. 40. north latitude, and from 1. 50 eaſt, to 6. weſt longitude from Greenwich. The origin of the name is by many writers derived from a colony of Saxons, who arrived in this country from Anglen, or Angelen, a ſmall country of Denmark; however this is at beſt doubtful. To the Romans it was known by the name of Britain. Cæſar ſeems to have had no other motive than glory in his conqueſt of Britain; and after all, the Roman power was circumſcribed within very narrow limits till the time of Claudius, and even under him the ſubmiſſion was imperfect; that glory was reſerved for Julius Agricola, by whoſe talents and virtue Britain became a Roman province : in exchange for liberty and independence, the Britons gained urbanity and civilization; they acquired the manners, the language, the arts and ſciences of the Romans; and ſecured by fortifications which Agricola had erected, againſt the incurſions of their northern neighbours, lived a long time in undiſturbed quiet, without thinking of the liberty they had loſt. In the decline of the Roman empire, Britain was neglected; and in the beginning of the fifth century, the Picts and Scots broke through the wall of Agricola, which had been ſtrengthened by Severus, and invaded the country of the Britons, who implored ſuccours from the celebrated Aetius, but in vain; reduced to deſpair, they abandoned their homes, and ſought refuge in the foreſts. Vortigern, one of their princes, perſuaded them to ſeek ſuccours from Germany; and the Saxons, who inhabited the ſea coaſts from Sleſwick to the mouth of the Rhine, ſeized this occaſion of penetrating into Great Britain. Hengiſt and Horſa arrived with troops in three veſſels, attacked the Picts and Scots, and formed a ſettlement for themſelves. They were joined by others of their countrymen, but not without oppoſition on the part of the Britons, under ſeveral warlike princes; but all reſiſtance was in vain, many of them left the iſland, and fled into Armorica, afterwards called Bretagne. Hengiſt founded the kingdom of Kent. This conqueſt brought new colonies from Germany; the Angles joined the Saxons. They had the ſame language, the ſame cuſtom, and moſt probably the ſame origin. Common intereſt united them againſt the ancient inhabitants, who, after many defeats, ſought refuge in the mountains of Cornwall and Wales. In the year 477, Ella arrived with troops from Germany, and founded the kingdom of Suſſex. Cerdick, another Saxon leader, found more reſiſtance; the brave prince Arthur obtained ſeveral victories over him, but could not prevent his founding, with his ſon Kenrick, the kingdom of Weſſex, compriſing Hampſhire, Dorſetſhire, Wiltſhire, Berkſhire, and the Iſle of Wight. The kingdoms of Eaſt Anglia, Mercia, and Eſſex, were formed nearly about the ſame time; that of Northumberland was not founded till the year 547. Thus roſe the Heptarchy, or ſeven Saxon kingdoms eſtabliſhed in Great Britain. All theſe were united in the perſon of Egbert, a warlike king of Weſſex, in the year 827. The Danes had before began their invaſions and piracies both on the coaſts of France and England; in the reign of Egbert, they renewed their incurſions, made an alliance with the Britons of Cornwall, and advanced into Devonſhire. Egbert defeated them, but died too ſoon to ſecure the kingdom from farther encroachments. They took advantage of the weakneſs of his ſucceſſor; they ſailed up the Thames in a fleet of 350 ſail, ſeized on the Iſle of Thanet, ſet fire to London and Canterbury, and penetrated into Surry. Ethelwolf marched againſt them, in perſon, but could not ſtop their ravages. During the reign of Alfred, the Danes were reduced to obedience, and confined to Eaſt Anglia and Northumberland. Under the ſucceſſors of Alfred, they made ſeveral freſh attempts; a great number of them had at different times taken up their abode in different parts of the kingdom, and peace had frequently been purchaſed for large ſums of money. In the year 1002, Ethelred, at that time king, formed the inhuman reſolution of maſſacring every Dane in his dominions, which was put into execution on the 15th of November, the feſtival of St. Brice, the day in which the Danes uſually bathed themſelves. They were ſlaughtered without diſtinction of age or ſex. The ſiſter of the king of Denmark ſuffered with the reſt, after having beheld the murder of her huſband and her children. The Danes, who were now rouſed by revenge as well as avarice, brought freſh troops into the kingdom, led by their king Sweyn : the Engliſh made preparations for reſiſtance, but in vain; Ethelred was obliged to fly from his country into Normandy, whilſt Sweyn aſſumed the crown. This, however, he did not long enjoy, for he died ſix weeks after. Ethelred returned, and at his death, was ſucceeded by his ſon Edmund; but the Daniſh party was now ſo great that, after ſeveral battles, the kingdom was divided between Edmund and Canute, the ſon of Sweyn, who, on the death of Edmund, which happened ſoon after, uſurped the whole. The Daniſh tyranny laſted not long. It began with Canute, in 1017, and ended with Hardicanute, or Canute II. in 1040. The Saxon race was then reſtored in the perſon of Edward, ſirnamed the Confeſſor. Harold, ſon of earl Godwin, held the crown after him only a few months, from January to October, 1066, when the battle of Haſtings was fought, and Harold loſt his crown and life, to William the Norman, ſirnamed the Conqueror. This ſeems the æra from which to date a regular deſcent of Engliſh kings. William I. was the illegitimate ſon of the duke of Normandy. He took advantage of his ſucceſs, and went directly to London, where he was met by ſome of the nobility and principal clergy, and crowned at the abby of Weſtminſter. His reign was diſturbed by a rebellion of his eldeſt ſon in Normandy, and ſeveral commotions in England; nevertheleſs, at his death, in 1087, he left the crown firmly ſecured to his ſecond ſon. William II. ſurnamed Rufus, was killed by an arrow, ſhot inadvertently, as he was hunting in New Foreſt, in the year 1100. His youngeſt brother, Henry I. ſurnamed Beauclerc, ſeized on the crown in the abſence of the elder, Robert, who was at that time in Paleſtine on a cruſade, and on his return was put into priſon, where he was kept the remainder of his life. Henry died in the year 1135. He left the crown to his daughter Matilda, who had firſt been the wife of Henry IV. emperor of Germany, and afterwards of Geoffrey Plantagenet, earl of Anjou; and to her ſon by the latter: notwithſtanding this, Stephen, earl of Blois, ſon of Adela, a younger daughter of William I. laid claim to the crown, and in ſpite of the pretenſions of Matilda and her ſon, was finally ſucceſsful. The conteſt was long and bloody; but at length it was agreed, that Stephen ſhould remain in poſſeſſion of the crown to his death, when prince Henry was to ſucceed him. Stephen died in 1154, when Henry II. ſirnamed Plantagenet, took poſſeſſion of the crown without oppoſition. The crown from him deſcended in a direct line to Richard II. who was depoſed, in 1399, by the artifices of the duke of Lancaſter, who ſoon after became king, under the name of Henry IV. He was ſucceeded by his ſon and grandſon. Another branch of the Plantagenets, called the houſe of York, then ſeized the crown. Dreadful was the conteſt between the two houſes of York and Lancaſter for 30 years, in which above 100,000 Engliſhmen loſt their lives, and ended with the death of Richard III. the laſt of the Plantagenets, in 1485; when Henry Tudor, earl of Richmond, was made king. The line of Tudor ended in Elizabeth, in 1603. James VI. king of Scotland, of the name of Stuart, came peaceably to the crown, as a deſcendant of Henry VII. His ſon, Charles, who ſucceeded him, was beheaded, in the year 1649. A commonweath and the protectorate of Cromwell continued till the year 1660; when the regal ſtate was reſtored in the perſon of Charles II. In the year 1688, James II. after ſome violent diſputes with the parliament, withdrew to France. The throne was declared vacant, and the prince of Orange, who had married his daughter, was by a convention proclaimed king, by the name of William III. At the death of William, in 1701, Anne, the other daughter of James II. ſucceeded. In her ended the Stuart line. By an act of ſucceſſion, paſſed in the reign of king William III. the crown was entailed on the elector of Hanover, as deſcendant from the princeſs Sophia, granddaughter of James I. George I. was proclaimed king, in the year 1714, immediately on the death of queen Anne. Two unſucceſsful attempts were made to reinſtate the Stuart family, in the years 1715 and 1745. The male line of that family is now extinct, ſo that there is no oppoſition to the preſent family on the throne. England is divided into 40 ſhires, or counties, viz. Bedfordſhire, Berkſhire, Buckinghamſhire, Cambridgeſhire, Cheſhire, Cornwall, Cumberland, Derbyſhire, Devonſhire, Dorſetſhire, Durham, Eſſex, Glouceſterſhire, Hampſhire, Herefordſhire, Hertfordſhire, Huntingdonſhire, Kent, Lancaſhire, Leiceſterſhire, Lincolnſhire, Middleſex, Monmouthſhire, Norfolk, Northamptonſhire, Northumberland, Nottinghamſhire, Oxfordſhire, Rutlandſhire, Shropſhire, Somerſetſhire, Staffordſhire, Suffolk, Surry, Suſſex, Warwickſhire, Weſtmoreland, Wiltſhire, Worceſterſhire, and Yorkſhire; all of theſe, as well as their principal towns and rivers, are ſpoken of in this Work at large. The government, or at leaſt the execution of the government, is veſted in the king, whoſe power is circumſcribed by the laws of the land, which laws are made by the repreſentatives of the people aſſembled in parliament, agreed to by the nobles, and confirmed by the king. All public or private wrongs, or diſputes, are referred to a jury of 12 men, who are ſworn to do juſtice between the parties concerned, and for this purpoſe aſſizes are held in different parts of the kingdom, where men learned in the law ſit as judges twice every year, with others alſo, who attend, not as judges, but as counſellors to plead for each party. Theſe are called circuits, and two judges generally attend in each. The religion of England was Chriſtianity, according to the rites of the church of Rome, till the reign of Henry VIII. who threw off the ſupremacy of the pope, and made himſelf be acknowledged the head of the church; and, in the year 1562, the articles of religion agreed upon by the archbiſhops and biſhops, were publiſhed by queen Elizabeth. England contains two archbiſhops, and 24 biſhops, who are peers of the realm, and all appointed by the king; beſides the ſee of Sodor and Man, which is in the gift of the Athol family, as deſcendants from the lords of Man, but not being a peer of England, he has no ſeat in parliament. The nobility of England are created by the king, and form a diſtinct branch of the legiſlature; their conſent is neceſſary to the formation of every law, with a power to reject or alter any bill, except a money bill, which has paſſed the houſe of commons; a majority of votes determines, and an abſent peer can vote by proxy. Every nobleman accuſed of any crime muſt be judged by his peers. The houſe of commons conſiſts of 558 members, choſen by the counties, cities, and towns of England, Scotland, and Wales; of which 489 are choſen for England, 24 for Wales, and 45 for Scotland. Theſe are the repreſentatives of the people at large, who are bound by every tie of honour and good faith to do the beſt they can for the people whom they repreſent. The ſtanding army of Great Britain is very large. In the year 1792, the eſtabliſhment conſiſted of 7 regiments of dragoon guards, 19 regiments of dragoons, 3 regiments of foot-guards, and 77 regiments of foot, beſides marines and artillery. Since the breaking out of the French war, the number of regiments has been increaſed. The navy of England is, perhaps, the largeſt and beſt appointed of any in Europe; the number of ſeamen in time of peace is calculated at rather more than 14,000; the number in time of war muſt depend on circumſtances. In the American war they were more than 100,000. The continual wars in which this country has been engaged have encreaſed the expences of the nation, ſo much that the actual debt amounts to at leaſt 350 millions ſterling, to pay the annual intereſt of which it has been neceſſary to lay on heavy taxes. The militia of the kingdom are regiments of men raiſed in each county by ballot for the internal defence of the kingdom, which they are never to leave without their own conſent. The climate is healthy, though uncertain; frequent changes happen in the weather, and thoſe ſudden and unexpected, which render the harveſt, eſpecially in the northern counties, precarious: yet very rarely does it happen but with care and attention the induſtrious huſbandman will be rewarded by a profitable crop, and harveſt well ſecured. The ſoil of England is various, and differs in different counties; wheat, barley, oats, rye, French wheat, beans, and peas, are the grand and principal productions. Many of the counties produce apples and pears, from which cyder and perry are made, by ſome thought equal to the greater part of the German wines; other fruits have been introduced, for native fruits are few, and thoſe not good; plumbs, cherries, peaches, nectarines, apricots, figs, grapes, and other fruits, are by the care and ſkill of the Engliſh gardeners raiſed in the greateſt plenty and variety. The oak is a native of England, as likewiſe the beech; the elm moſt probably is an exotic; but there are few plants in any part of the known world but what are introduced either into the plantation, the nurſery, or the green-houſe, in England. Among the wild animals formerly were wolves, bears, foxes, deer, badgers, &c. The two firſt have been totally deſtroyed, the others yet remain. Among the domeſtic animals are cattle, horſes, ſheep, and hogs. In the mountains of the different parts of the kingdom are mines of copper, iron, lead, tin, and coals, with quarries of marble, free-ſtone, lime-ſtone, ſlate, &c. The manufactures are various and extenſive in every article made of wool, cotton, flax, ſilk, iron, ſteel, &c. Many villages and towns are employed in providing for the demands of merchants to almoſt every quarter of the globe. Rich commercial companies are eſtabliſhed, who, as well as individual merchants, export the manufactures of this country, and import others in their room. The principal rivers of England are the Thames, the Severn, the Trent, the Tyne, the Medway, the Humber, the Merſey, and the Tamer. London is the capital: the next towns in point of commercial importance are Briſtol and Liverpool. Canterbury and York are archbiſhops' ſees; Oxford and Cambridge are univerſities. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated by ſome at 7,000,000, by others at only 5,000,000; a ſtrange difference, but both muſt be uncertain.

ENGLAND (New). That part of the United States of America which lies to the eaſt of New York, is known by the general name of New England, formerly called New England Colonies, and now The States of New England, being divided into five ſtates, New Hampſhire, Maſſachuſetts, Rhode Iſland, Connecticut, and Vermont, to which might be added a ſixth, called Main, for though at preſent united with Maſſachuſett, from its increaſing population, the time of its being erected into a ſeparate ſtate is not far diſtant. New England is the moſt populous part of the United States, and could on any great and ſudden emergency furniſh an army of 165,000 men, who from their earlieſt youth have been trained to the uſe of arms; the greater part of theſe are farmers and owners of land. The inhabitants of New England are moſtly deſcended from the natives of England, and they univerſally ſpeak the Engliſh language. Learning is here more generally diffuſed among the people than in any other country, from ſchools in every townſhip. One great characteriſtic of the New Englanders is their enthuſiaſtic love of liberty; they are generally tall and well made; they are frugal, induſtrious, ſober, and temperate. A law, which is the ſame in all the New England ſtates, divides the poſſeſſions of the father equally among the children, with the exception only of a double portion to the eldeſt. New England may be called a nurſery of men. The ſtate of Vermont has riſen in a ſmall time, and thouſands of the inhabitants emigrate every year into every ſtate and conſiderable town of the union. New England owes its firſt ſettlement to the Puritans, who were driven from Europe, by religious perſecution, about the beginning of the 17th century. The principal exports of New England are mackarel, ſalmon, cod, and other fiſh; whale-oil and whale-bone, timber, maſts, boards, ſtaves, hoops and ſhingles; horſes, mules, ſalted beef, pork, pot-aſh, pearl-aſh, flax-ſeed, apples, cyder, corn, butter, and cheeſe. The ſoil is different, and the productions vary likewiſe; on the beſt lands walnuts and cheſnut-trees abound, on the next beſt lands grow oaks and beech, while upon poorer ſoils are found firs, pitch pines, &c. Other trees and plants are the maple, red flowering maple, elm, ſaſſafras, locuſt, tulip-tree, cherry, mulberry, pear, &c. Among the fruits which grow wild are ſeveral ſorts of grapes, which are ſmall, ſour, and thick ſkinned. The principal productions are wheat, Indian corn, rye, oats, barley, hemp, flax, French wheat, peas, beans, &c. The fruits produced from culture are apples in the greateſt plenty, pears, quinces, peaches, plumbs, apricots, cherries, gooſberries, ſtrawberries, &c.

The inhabitants of New England have founded colleges, which flouriſh more than any others in the United States; they are fond of learning the arts, and cultivate them with ſucceſs. New England breeds ſome of the fineſt cattle in America, for which the extenſive vallies between the hills and on the ſides of the innumerable rivers and brooks are well ſuited. The principal rivers are the Connecticut, Merrimack, Penobſcot, Piſcataqua and Saco.

It is divided into 19 hundreds, in which are 26 towns, 403 pariſhes, about 63,000 houſes, and 325,000 inhabitants. Except towards the ſouth-weſt, the air of Eſſex is generally healthy; this part, called emphatically, The Hundreds of Eſſex, is repreſented as highly prejudicial and unwholeſome; particularly ſubjecting the inhabitants to intermitting fevers; but even this part has been meliorated by the care and good huſbandry of the inhabitants; the ſoil for the moſt part is fertile, the arable land yielding large crops of corn, and the meadows and paſtures feeding and fattening a great number of cattle and ſheep; very large manufactures of ſerges, bazes, and other woollen goods, are eſtabliſhed in ſeveral towns and villages, particularly at Colcheſter, and round about that town. The principal productions are wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, flax, hemp, coriander-ſeeds, caraway ſeeds, potatoes, teazles for the woollen manufactures, rape, muſtard, and cole-ſeed; all which find a ready market in London. Towards the weſt, on the borders of Hertfordſhire and Middleſex, are large dairy farms, celebrated for the goodneſs of the butter, particularly that which is made in the neighbourhood of Epping. On the ſouth ſide of the county, on the borders of the Thames, are extenſive ſalt marſhes, and other low lands, into which cattle and horſes are put to graze, which cleanſe and fatten them. Saffron is cultivated principally in the north-weſt part of the county, towards and in the county of Cambridge, particularly towards Saffron Walden, whence its name. Eſſex contains a good ſhare of woodland, and the rivers are well ſtocked with fiſh. The towns are Colcheſter, Harwich, Maldon, Chelmsford, Saffron-Walden, Rumford, Brentwood, Ingateſtone, Witham, Manningtree, Hedingham, Halſtead, Braintree, Epping, Waltham, Barking, Dunmow, Ongar, Greys-Thurrock, Coggeſhal, Dedam, Billericay, Rochford, Lea, and Hatfield Broadoak. The three firſt are boroughs, and ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament, making, with two for the county, eight in the whole. The principal rivers are, the Thames, which ſeparates this county from Kent; the Stour, which divides it from Suffolk; the Lea, which forms the weſtern boundary againſt the county of Middleſex and a ſmall part of Hertfordſhire; the Stort, which ſeparates it from the latter county till it joins the Lea; the Chelmer, the Blackwater, the Coln, the Crouch, and the Roding.

EVREUX, a town of France, and capital of the department of the Eure. Before the revolution, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Rouen, and containing eight pariſhes. Its commerce conſiſts in woollen and linen cloth, lace, grain, wine, and cider: 6 poſts S. Rouen, and 12½ W. Paris. Long. 18. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 2. N.—This city was taken by the royaliſts, in the month of July, 1793.

EVRON, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Mayenne: 5 leagues ENE. Laval, and 4 SSE. Mayenne.

EUROPE, one of the grand diviſions of the world. We can only ſay in general, that towards the eaſt it is bounded by Aſia, without aſcertaining the boundary line, elſewhere the limits are more accurately defined, from the Sea of Aſoph to the Mediterranean on the ſouth-eaſt, through the Euxine, or Black Sea, the Boſphorus, the ſea of Marmora, the Dardanelles, and the Archipelago; on the ſouth it is bounded by the Mediterranean; on the weſt by the Atlantic; and on the north by the Frozen Sea: Cabo di Rocca, or the Rock of Liſbon, on the coaſt of Portugal, being the moſt weſterly point of land, Long. 9. 6. E. Ferro, and probably the moſt eaſterly may be about the 75th degree of eaſt longitude. Its extent from ſouth to north is ſuppoſed to be from the 26th degree to the 72d degree of north latitude. The number of inhabitants in Europe is calculated at 150 millions; but it is certainly capable of ſupporting a much greater number. Theſe form different ſtates, which are ſometimes united and ſometimes divided, as different political intereſts may weigh; each ſtate ſpeaks a different language, many of which are derived from the ſame original ſource, or a mixture of others formed and ſanctioned by time. Europe may be divided into 16 parts four to the north, viz. the Britiſh iſlands, Denmark with Norway, Sweden, and Ruſſia: 8 in the centre, viz. France, Netherlands, Swiſſerland, Germany, Bohemia, Hungary, Poland, and Pruſſia; and four to the ſouth, viz. Portugal, Spain, Italy, and European Turkey. Its length from eaſt to weſt is reckoned above 1100 leagues, and breadth from north to ſouth about 900. Although Europe is the ſmalleſt quarter of the world in number of ſquare miles, yet it may be conſidered as the principal in every thing relating to man in ſociety, mildneſs of air, fertility of ſoil, whence are produced all the neceſſaries, and moſt of the luxuries of life; for the beauty, ſtrength, courage, and wiſdom of its inhabitants: the excellence of its government, laws, and religion. The principal iſlands of Europe are Great Britain, Ireland, the Orcades, the Hebrides, Iceland, the iſles of Ferro in the Atlantic, Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, Candy, the Greek iſles, Majorca, Minorca, and others in the Mediterranean; and in the Baltic are Zealand, Funen, Rugen, Bornholm, Gottland, Oeſel, &c. The moſt conſiderable rivers are the Po and the Tyber, in Italy; the Rhine, the Danube, the Elbe, and the Oder, in Germany; the Loire, the Seine, the Rhône, and the Garonne, in France: the Tagus and the Duero, in Spain; the Viſtula, in Poland; the Dnieper, the Volga, and the Don, in Ruſſia; the Thames and the Severn, in England; the Tai, in Scotland, the Shannon, in Ireland; the Scheldt and the Meuſe, in the Netherlands, &c.

EXCA, or Ecſa, a town of Spain, in the kingdom of Aragon: 25 miles NW. Saragoſſa.

EXETER, a city of England, and capital of Devonſhire, ſituated on the river Ex, about 10 miles from the Engliſh Channel; the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Canterbury, removed to this city from Crediton, by Edward the Confeſſor. The city is ancient, probably built at the time the Romans were in poſſeſſion of Britain: it was ſurrounded with walls, and had ſix gates, moſt of which are pulled down. Beſides the cathedral, which is a magnificent pile of building, there are 18 other churches, a few chapels, and five large meeting-houſes. The city is governed by a mayor, recorder, town clerk, &c. and was incorporated by king John, and erected into a county by Henry VIII. All pleas and civil cauſes are tried by the mayor, aldermen, recorder, and common-council; criminal cauſes, and private wrongs, are judged by eight aldermen, who are juſtices of the peace. In the north weſt corner of the city ſtood the caſtle, called Rougemont, from the colour of the hill on which it was built, ſuppoſed to have been founded by the Weſt Saxon kings, and afterwards made the ſeat of the earls of Cornwall. Nothing but the outer walls remain. This caſtle was completely ruined in the civil wars, when the city held out againſt Fairfax, who blockaded it for two months. The principal public buildings are the guildhall, and public hoſpital. The guildhall is a ſpacious and convenient building, built in its preſent form in the year 1593, but repaired in 1720. The public hoſpital was erected by ſubſcription, in the year 1740, for the ſick and lame of the city and county of Devon. The trade of the city of Exeter conſiſts principally in the exportation of coarſe woollen goods, manufactured in the counties of Devon, Cornwall, and Somerſet; theſe goods the merchants of Exeter buy rough from the loom, mill, dye, and finiſh them for uſe, and afterwards export them; they chiefly conſiſt of druggets, duroys, kerſeys, and everlaſtings, which find a ready ſale in Italy, Spain, Germany, Holland, France, and Portugal, to the annual amount of more than half a million ſterling. Beſides this, the Eaſt India company take off a quantity of long-ells, amounting to the value of about 105,000l. of which about a fourth part are ſhipped at Exeter; the remainder at Dartmouth and Plymouth. For making theſe woollens, about 4000 bags of wool are imported at Exeter from Kent. The reſt of the wool made uſe of is the product of Devonſhire and the neighbouring counties. Exeter likewiſe imports dying drugs, wines, and fruit, from Spain and Italy: linens from Germany; and hemp, iron, timber, and tallow, from the Baltic. It ſends ſhips to the Newfoundland and Greenland fiſheries. It ſupplies the country round with coal, both from the northern collieries, and from Wales; and it has an exportation of corn, eſpecially oats, to London. Exeter was twice ravaged by the Danes. In the reign of Henry VII. it was beſieged by Perkin Warbeck, but made ſo brave a defence that he was compelled to raiſe the ſiege, and the king, in acknowledgment of the bravery of the citizens, preſented them with a ſword which he himſelf wore, to be carried before the mayor in all corporate proceſſions. Three markets are held here weekly, Wedneſdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, one of which is for ſerges, of which 80,000l. or 100,000l. worth have been ſold in a day. Exeter ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 78½ miles SW. Bath, 78 SW. Briſtol, and 173 WSW. London. Long. 3. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 40. N.

EXETER, a town of United America, in the ſtate of New Hampſhire, on a river of the ſame name; formerly much employed in ſhipbuilding; but this buſineſs was interrupted by the war, and is not yet revived. FALKLAND'S ISLANDS: theſe iſlands were properly ſeen by Magellan, Sharp, and Drake; nevertheleſs Davies is ſuppoſed to have been the firſt that diſcovered them, in 1592. In the year 1594, they were viſited by Sir Richard Hawkins, who ſaw ſome fires, and ſuppoſed them to have been inhabited. They were called by him Hawkins's Maiden Land. The name of Falkland is ſaid to have been given by captain Strong, in 1639. Roggewin, who paſſed by the eaſt coaſt in the year 1721, called them South Belgia, they have likewiſe been called New Iſlands of St. Lewis, and Malouines, but the name of Falkland has generally prevailed. They conſiſt of two large iſlands, with a great number of ſmaller ſurrounding them, and are ſituated in the Southern Atlantic Ocean, to the eaſtward of the Straits of Magellan. In the year 1764, commodore Eyron was diſpatched by the Britiſh court to take poſſeſſion of theſe iſlands, and ſettle a colony at a place which he called Port Egmont. They were at firſt repreſented as a valuable acquiſition, but ceded to Spain, in the year 1774. Indeed, theſe iſlands do not ſeem likely to have been any advantage to Great Britain, as we learn from the obſervations of captain Macbride, who ſays: "We found a maſs of iſlands and broken lands, of which the ſoil was nothing but a bog, with no better proſpect than that of barren mountains, beaten by ſtorms almoſt perpetual. Yet this is ſummer, and if the winds of winter hold their natural proportion, thoſe who lie but two cables' length from the ſhore, muſt paſs weeks without having any communication with it." Beſides the names above mentioned, they have alſo been called Pepys Iſlands, and Sebald de Wert's Iſlands. Long. 56. 30. to 62. 16. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 6. to 52. 30. S.

FARO OF MESSINA, a ſtrait of the Mediterranean, between Sicily and Calabria, about ſeven miles acroſs, remarkable for the tide ebbing and flowing every ſix hours. In this ſtrait was a ſea-fight in the year 1675, between the French and Spaniards, in which the latter were defeated.

FAROER ISLANDS, iſlands in the North Sea, belonging to Denmark, about 170 leagues ſouth of Iceland, but ſomething more to the weſt of Norway, and are 25 in number; though but 17 are inhabited. They extend about 70 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. When the day is at the greateſt length in theſe iſlands, the ſun riſes at ſeven minutes after two, and ſets 53 minutes after nine. In the ſhorteſt day the ſun riſes here 53 minutes after nine, and ſets ſeven minutes after two. The ſummers and winters are very moderate in this climate; and as the latter are neither long nor ſevere, the cattle feed here in the open air all the year round. However, the dampneſs of the air makes the inhabitants ſubject to many diſtempers, as coughs, the ſcurvy, &c. Theſe iſlands are, indeed, ſo many ſolid rocks, but the ſurface of them is covered with earth, or mould, to the depth of two feet, and this ſhallow ſoil is ſo fertile as to yield twenty for one. The paſtures are excellent, eſpecially for ſheep, in the great flocks of which the wealth of the inhabitants conſiſts. But a hard winter is very deſtructive to theſe animals, as in general they run wild about the country. Here is a great plenty both of land and water fowl; and it is naturally to be ſuppoſed that the inhabitants do not want fiſh. Ths commodities vended here to foreigners are ſalted mutton, gooſe quills, feathers, and eider down: knit woollen waiſtcoats, caps, and ſtockings; tallow, &c. The iſlands of Faroer were diſcovered and peopled in the time of Harold Haarfager, king of Norway; and one Griener Camban was the firſt who built a houſe on one of theſe iſlands. The Chriſtian religion being quite eſtabliſhed in Denmark, about the year of Chriſt 1000, the Goſpel was alſo propagated in the iſlands of Faroer, which were even thought worthy of a particular biſhop; and the iſland of Stromoe was appointed for his place of reſidence. There are ſeven pariſhes and 39 churches under the dioceſe of Zealand. Theſe iſlands, together with Iceland, are under one governer; but they have their reſpective langman, or provincial judge, their land-vogt, their inferior judge, and king's conſul, who ſuperintends the trade carried on between the Faroer iſlands and Copenhagen. Lat. 61. 15. to 62. 10. FAYAL, one of the Azore iſlands, about nine leagues long, and three wide. The climate is good, and the air always mild and pure. The cold of winter is never felt, and the heat of ſummer is tempered by refreſhing winds. It produces plenty of paſture for cattle; birds are numerous, and plenty of fiſh is caught on the coaſt. The name is given it from the great number of beech-trees (Faya in Portugueze) which grow there, beſides which it has great variety of other wood. The chief place, if not the only town, is Villa Horta, or Orta. Fayal was firſt peopled by Flemings, who, imagining the Portugueze garriſon to be a kind of oppreſſive tax upon them, petitioned his catholic majeſty for leave to take upon themſelves the defence of the iſland. Their requeſt was granted, and the event almoſt fatal; for the Engliſh, at different times, under the earls of Cumberland and Eſſex, made deſcents on Fayal, took it, and deſtroyed the fortifications, after having taken and burnt a ſquadron of rich homeward bound ſhips that lay in this harbour. This diſaſter induced the king to reſume the defence of the iſland; ſince which time a Portugueze garriſon has conſtantly been maintained here. Fayal is the moſt weſtern of the Azores. Long. 10. 45. W. Ferro. Lat. 38. 22. N.

FAYOUM, or Feium, a province of Egypt, ſituated on the weſt ſide of the Nile, extending from the river to the Birket-el-Kerun; formerly the province of Arſinoe, and interſected by canals cut by the ancient Egyptians, and then forming a communication between the river and the lake. Fayoum, formerly one of the wealthieſt and moſt fertile provinces of Egypt, is much declined in its fertility, through the oppreſſion of the Turks; inſtead of flouriſhing cities, only mud-wall villages are found; the canals are almoſt dry, and the Birket-el-Kerun, whoſe ancient name was Mœris, reduced to two-thirds of its former extent; notwithſtanding all this, wherever the waters can penetrate, the ſame productions are found in the ſame abundance. The Copts ſtill cultivate the olives and the vines, which their forefathers planted; ſtill gather excellent grapes, of which they make a moſt agreeable white wine. The whole country is now covered with wheat, barley, and dourra, which riſe, in ſucceſſion, uninterruptedly, for ſeven or eight months. The tall flax, the ſugar-cane, and vegetables of all kinds, ſprout up, almoſt without culture; cucumbers, and near twenty ſpecies of melons, melting, ſweet, and wholeſome, adorn the banks of the rivulets, cluſtering fruit-trees are ſcattered over the plain. Amid a diverſity of trees and plants, foreſts of the roſe-buſh grow near villages. In other provinces this fine ſhrub only ornaments gardens, here it is cultivated, and the roſe-water, diſtilled from its odoriferous flower, forms an extenſive branch of commerce. The canals and lake ſwarm with fiſh, which are caught in prodigious quantities, and eat in the province, or carried to the neighbouring cities, and are as cheap as at Damietta. When the froſt and ſnow of winter is felt in the northern countries, innumerable flocks of birds reſort to the lake Mœris, and the canals of Fayoum. The people catch abundance of geeſe, with golden plumage and a moſt agreeable flavour, fat and delicate, ducks, teal, ſwans, the ſkins of which are uſed like furs, and pelicans.

FAYOUM, a town of Egypt, and capital of the province ſo called, which formerly contained public baths, markets, and colleges; divided by the canal of Joſeph, and ſurrounded by gardens. At preſent it is only half a league in circumference, and ſtands on the eaſtern ſhore of the canal. The remainder is deſtroyed, and the colleges are no more. Houſes built of ſun-dried bricks, preſent a gloomy aſſemblage of huts; their inhabitants are poor, and deprived of energy, their arts are reduced to ſome manufactures of mats, coarſe carpets, and the diſtillation of roſe-water. The town is governed by a cachef, under one of the beys of Grand Cairo. Several Arab Sheiks, who have lands in the neighbourhood, compoſe the council, and go to the divan, twice or three times a week, as ſummoned by the governor; their chief is held in great reſpect, but the members of adminiſtration cannot long enjoy concord: the continual wars, at Grand Cairo, diſturb the tranquility of the provinces, and the poſſeſſors of lands and governments are expelled by the victorious faction: 49 miles SSW. Cairo. Long. 48. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 29. 27. N.

FERNANDES, a town of Portugal, in the province of Tra-los-Montes: 16 miles WSW. Outeiro.

FERNANDEZ, or Juan-Fernandez, an iſland in the Southern Pacific Ocean, about 110 leagues weſt from the coaſt of Chili; about 4 leagues long, and hardly two wide, of an irregular ſhape. It is ſaid to owe its name to a Spaniard, who formerly procured a grant of it, and began a ſettlement, but afterwards abandoned it. The only ſafe anchoring place on the iſland is on the north coaſt, in Cumberland Bay. The northern part of the iſland is compoſed of high craggy hills, many of them inacceſſible, though generally covered with trees. The ſoil of this part is looſe and ſhallow, ſo that very large trees on the hills ſoon periſh for want of root, and are eaſily overturned; which occaſioned the unfortunate death of one of commodore Anſon's ſailors, who being upon the hills in ſearch of goats, caught hold of a tree upon a declivity to aſſiſt him in his aſcent, and this giving way, he immediately rolled down the hill, and though in his fall he faſtened on another tree of conſiderable bulk, yet that too giving way, he fell amongſt the rocks, and was daſhed to pieces. The ſouthern, or rather the ſouth-weſt part of the iſland, is widely different from the reſt, being dry, ſtony, and deſtitute of trees, but very flat and low, compared with the hills on the northern part. This part of the iſland is never frequented by ſhips, being ſurrounded by a ſteep ſhore, and having little or no freſh water. The trees of which the woods on the northern ſide of the iſland are compoſed, are moſt of them aromatics, and of many different ſorts: there are none of them of a ſize to yield any conſiderable timber, except the myrtle trees, which are the largeſt on the iſland; but even theſe would not work to a greater length than 40 feet. The pimento and cabbage tree grow there, though in no great plenty. There are ſeveral hills of a peculiar ſort of red earth, exceeding vermillion in colour, which, perhaps, might prove uſeful for many purpoſes. Great quantities of water creſſes and purſlane were found, and excellent wild ſorrel, and a vaſt profuſion of turnips and Sicilian radiſhes. Long. 78. 52. W. Greenwich. Lat. 33. 40. S.

FERNANDO DE NORONHA, or Naronho, an iſland in the Atlantic, full of mountains, which have the appearance of volcanos, but covered with verdure; not above a league in length, and its form is ſaid to be like a laurel leaf. FERRANDINA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Baſilicata: 15 miles SW. Matera.

FERRARA, a city of Italy, and capital of the Ferrareſe, ſituated on a branch of the Po, on the frontiers of the Venetian States. In the year 585, it was fortified by Smaragdus, patrician and exarch of Ravenna, and in the year 657, it was erected into a biſhopric by pope Vitalian, who removed the ſee from Vicovenza to this place. It was enlarged at ſeveral times, and became celebrated under the princes of the houſe of Eſt; but when it loſt its dukes, it declined in its magnificence, and riches. It is about four miles in circumſerence, and defended by a citadel, ſtrong walls, and baſtions. The ſtreets are handſome, with many magnificent palaces and beautiful churches. The cathedral is remarkable for its antiquity. They reckon 100 churches, 38 convents, and hardly 14,000 inhabitants. The environs are marſhy, and the air unwholeſome, conſequently thinly inhabited. In the year 1735, it was erected into an archbiſhopric. Arioſto lies buried in a Benedictine convent; and in the hoſpital of St. Ann, belonging to the city, Taſſo was confined as an idiot. Here is an univerſity, founded in the year 1390, by Albert, marquis of Ferrara. The pope has a legate at Ferrara, who reſides in a palace, ſituated in the midſt of the town, ſurrounded with walls, flanked with towers and ditches: 67 miles N. Bologna, and 40 SE. Mantua. Long. 29. 17. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 51. N.—This city was taken by the French, and is, with its territory, now united with Bologna, Modena, and Reggio, to form the Ciſpadana republic: it was formally ceded by the pope on the 19th of February, 1797.

FERRARESE, a province of Italy, in the ſtate of the Church; bounded on the north by the Poleſino, on the eaſt by the Gulf of Venice, on the ſouth by the Romagna and Bologneſe, and on the weſt by the Mantuan and Modeneſe. The whole country is fertile, but low and marſhy, being frequently overflowed by ſeveral branches of the Po, and other rivers which run through it, ſo that travelling is ſometimes dangerous without guides. This country was a long time an independent duchy, granted by the emperor, Frederic II. to the houſe of Eſt, who, at the ſame time, poſſeſſed the duchies of Modena and Reggio, and the Poleſino. The Poleſino was ſeized by the Venetians, in the year 1500, and has from that time been conſidered as a part of their dominions. Alphonſo II. the laſt legitimate prince of the houſe of Eſt, dying in 1597, without male heirs, Cæſar, ſon of Alphonſo, of the Eſt family, marquis of Montechio, laid claim to the duchy as next of kin, but as his father was born of a clandeſtine marriage contracted by Alphonſo I. with the daughter of a citizen of Ferrara after the death of his firſt wife, the pope declared Cæſar incapable of ſucceeding to the duchy of Ferrara, which was from this circumſtance united to the apoſtolic chamber, ſince which time it is become a province of the ſtate of the Church, and is governed by a legate of the pope. It contains but few towns, and, though in itſelf fertile, is badly cultivated, and thinly inhabited. The principal places are Ferrara and Comachio.

FEZ, a country of Africa, formerly a kingdom of great extent, bounded on the north by the ſtraits of Gibraltar and the Mediterranean Sea, on the eaſt by Algiers, on the ſouth by Morocco, and on the weſt by the Atlantic Ocean, it is divided into nine provinces or diſtricts, and the whole united to the empire of Morocco. The ſoil is fertile, producing, in the greateſt abundance, corn, fruit, flax, ſalt, gum, wax, &c. Oranges, lemons, figs, and olives, every where abound. The Moors, however, are but bad farmers, and cultivate only in proportion to their wants, ſo that two thirds of the country lie waſte. The whole of the country is not equally good, a conſiderable tract to the weſt of Old Fez is full of marſhes, which render the air unwholeſome, and the people unhealthy. The mountains abound with game, and the foreſt with wild beaſt. The lions are the moſt daring and ſavage in all Africa; horſes, camels, kine, ſheep, goats, and hares, are very numerous. The principal exports are hides and leather of all ſorts, particularly that ſtyled Morocco, ſkins, furs, wool, dates, almonds, figs, raiſins, olives, honey, wax, ſilk, cotton, flax, horſes, oſtrich feathers, gold-duſt, &c. The imports chiefly conſiſt in ſpicery, cochineal, vermillion, iron, braſs, ſteel, wire, arms, ammunition, drugs, watches, ſmall looking-glaſſes, quickſilver, tartar, opium, alum, aloes, Engliſh and other linen and woollen clothes, muſlins, callicoes, fuſtians, gold wire, ſilk of all kinds, brocades, damaſks, velvets, red woollen caps, toys and trinkets of all ſorts, Guinea cowries, combs, paper, and a great variety of earthen-ware. Fez is the capital.

FEZ, a city of Africa, and capital of the kingdom of that name, was built about the end of the eighth century, by Edris, the deſcendant of Mahomet and Ali, whoſe father, flying from Medina to avoid the proſcriptions of the caliph Abdallah, retired to the extremity of Africa, and was proclaimed ſovereign by the Moors. Sidy Edris ſucceeded to the crown of his father, founded the city of Fez, in 793, and built the moſque in which he is buried. From that time the city of Fez has been conſidered by the Moors as a ſacred aſylum, and an object of devotion. In the firſt moments of that zeal which every religious novelty inſpires, a ſtill larger moſque was built at Fez, and called Carubin, becauſe it was founded by the Arabs of Cairoan. This is one of the fineſt edifices in the empire, and, perhaps, in Africa. Many other moſques were afterwards built ſucceſſively at Fez, to which were annexed, according to the cuſtom of the Mahometans, colleges and hoſpitals; and this city was held in ſo high a degree of veneration, that, when the pilgrimage to Mecca was interrupted, in the fourth century of the Hegira, the weſtern Mahometans, as a ſubſtitute, repaired to Fez, while the eaſtern journeyed to Jeruſalem. When the Arabs had extended themſelves in Aſia, Africa, and Europe, they brought to Fez the knowledge they had acquired in the arts and ſciences; and, to its religious ſchools, this capital added academies for philoſophy, phyſic, and aſtronomy. Fez, reſorted to from almoſt all Africa, and the object of the devout pilgrimages of the Mahometans, ſoon became the rendezvous of the neighbouring provinces. The encreaſe of wealth introduced the love of pleaſure, and every ſpecies of luxury; licentiouſneſs quickly followed; and as its progreſs in hot countries is always moſt rapid, Fez, the ſchool of ſciences and manners, ſoon became the ſink of every vice. The public baths, which health, cleanlineſs and cuſtom, rendered neceſſary, became the receptacles of the moſt infamous debauchery. The Mahometans of Andaluſia, Grenada, and Cordova, during the revolutions of Spain, paſſed over to Fez, whither they brought new manners, knowledge, and, perhaps, ſome ſhades of civilization. They taught the Spaniſh method of dreſſing and dying red and yellow goat and ſheep ſkins, then called Cordovan leather, now Morocco, from the city of that name, where, however, the dye is leaſt in perfection. At Fez, likewiſe, they firſt eſtabliſhed the manufacture of milled woollen caps, worn by the Moors and eaſtern nations. Gauzes, ſilks, ſtuffs, and beautiful ſaſhes, wrought in gold and ſilver, are made at Fez; and the little they do proves how much might be done, were induſtry encouraged. Some love of learning is ſtill preſerved at Fez, where Arabic is better ſpoken than in the other parts of the empire: the rich Moors ſend their children to the ſchools at Fez, where they gain more inſtruction than they could do elſewhere. The moſque of Carubin is the only remarkable public building, and that cannot be freely examined. The city contains ſome tolerably convenient inns, the ſtreets are ill-paved, and ſo narrow, that in many places two horſemen cannot ride abreaſt. Fez, which, in paſt ages, attracted the attention of travellers, is no way preferable to the other cities of the empire, except by its ſituation, ſchools, induſtry, and ſomewhat more of urbanity: yet, though more poliſhed than their countrymen, the Moors of Fez are vain, ſuperſtitious, and intolerant. The ſaints, whom they pretend have been buried in that city, ſerve them for a pretext to forbid its entrance to Jews and Chriſtians; and an order from the emperor is neceſſary to gain admiſſion. The ſituation of Fez is remarkable for its ſingularity; it is ſeated at the bottom of a valley, and ſurrounded by hills in the form of a funnel, flattened at the narrow end. The upper part of the valley is divided into gardens, planted with high trees, orange groves, and orchards. A river winds along the valley, watering it in various directions, turning by its declivity a number of mills, and ſupplying water in abundance to all the gardens and moſt of the houſes. On the height of Old Fez is a plain capable of great cultivation. Jacob-Ben-Abdallah, of the race of Beni-Merins, built, in the 13th century, New Fez, contiguous to the Old, and, by its ſituation, keeping the latter in awe. The high town, which is well and healthily ſituated, contains ſome old palaces, in which the ſons of the emperor live. The New Town is inhabited by ſome Mooriſh families, but by ſtill more Jews, who trade with old Fez, notwithſtanding the contempt with which they are treated by the inhabitants: this contempt they endeavour to find a recompence for in their gains; 200 miles NNE. Morocco. Long. 12. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 34. 4. N.

FEZZAN, a country of Africa, ſituated to the ſouth of Tripoli, and 60 journies weſt from Cairo, containing, according to the report of the travellers, 28 towns, and 100 villages; the chief productions are dates and ſena. The capital is ſaid to be in Long. 44. E. Cape Verd. Lat. 26. N.

This county, as well as the reſt in the kingdom, was formerly ſubject to a Thane, which in the old Saxon language, as likewiſe in the Daniſh, ſignifies a ſervant of the king; but Maclolm Canmore, appointed Macduff, who was thane of Fife, firſt hereditary earl of Fife, for his ſervices, granting to his poſterity the right of placing the king in his chair at his coronation, the command of the van in the king's army, and power to compound for a ſum of money for the accidental murder of a nobleman or commoner. The county of Fife is extremely populous and fertile, abounding with cattle, coal, iron, lime-ſtone, and well furniſhed with manufactures. The number of towns is unparalleled, for the whole ſhore from Crail to Cuiroſs, about 40 Engliſh miles, is one continued chain of towns and villages. Nor are the houſes of the nobility and gentry leſs thick in the interior parts than the towns on the coaſt. Numerous and valuable plantations of trees are formed in different parts of the county, thoſe towards the coaſt have been much injured by the ſpray of the ſea; while thoſe in the interior parts flouriſh exceedingly. Cupar is the county town.

FINALE, a ſmall marquiſate of Italy, ſurrounded by the dominions of Genoa, agreeable, fertile, and populous. It formerly belonged to the family of Caretto, from whom it was ſold to Spain in the year 1590, and in 1602 annexed to the duchy of Milan. In the war for the Spaniſh ſucceſſion, it was taken by the French, and, in 1707, ceded, with the reſt of Lombardy, to the emperor. In the year 1713, the marquiſate was ſold to the republic of Genoa, on certain conditions, for 120,000 piaſtres. In the year 1743, the empreſs queen made over all her pretenſions to the town and marquiſate of Finale to the king of Sardinia; the republic of Genoa to be repaid the purchaſe-money, and Finale to be made a free port. When the king of Sardinia, by virtue of this convention, demanded the harbour and the marquiſate, the Genoeſe made ſeveral remonſtrances againſt it, which availing nothing, they determined to keep poſſeſſion by force of arms. Accordingly they entered into an alliance with France, Spain, and Naples; and though the king of Sardinia declared, if the republic would recede from the intended alliance with theſe crowns, he would make over to it all his rights and claims to Finale, yet the republic, ſo far from taking his word, in 1745, declared war againſt him. This proved an unfortunate circumſtance for Genoa, the king of Sardinia making himſelf maſter of this marquiſite, and ſeveral other parts of their poſſeſſions. However, by the peace of Aix le Chapelle, in 1748, the republic was reſtored to the poſſeſſion of all its former eſtates.

FINLAND, or Finnland, a country of Europe; bounded on the north by Lapland, on the eaſt by Ruſſia, on the ſouth by a gulf to which it gives name, and on the weſt by the Gulf of Bothnia. The land is fertile, but badly cultivated, and thinly inhabited. On a tract of more than 8000 ſquare leagues, hardly a million of ſouls are to be found. The paſtures are exceedingly good, but the cattle are ſmall. The foreſts of firs furniſh the principal articles of commerce, in wood, charcoal, timber, and planks, which are ſent to Stockholm for exportation. Game is abundant of various kinds. The lakes and rivers abound in variety of fiſh, and pearls are found on the coaſts. At the bottom of the moraſſes earth is dug, from which iron is extracted. There are alſo ſome mines of lead. Along the coaſts lie a great number of ſmall rocky iſlands. The inhabitants are in general brave and warlike, but have ſuffered much from the ravages of war. The corn principally cultivated is rye, barley, and buck-wheat; and the poorer ſort of inhabitants, for want of better food, dry even ſtraw, bruiſe and mix it with ſome meal to make bread. Finland was formerly a kingdom, and independent; at preſent, it is an archduchy, and annexed to Sweden. In the 12th century, great pains were taken for the converſion of the Finns to Chriſtianity; and Henry, who was biſhop of Upſal, in 1157, fell a martyr to his zeal in carrying on that pious undertaking. That prelate founded the firſt cathedral in Finland, at Randamoki; but the ſee was afterwards removed to Abo, which lies in the neighbourhood of the former. Martin Skytte, and Peter Serkilar were the firſt preachers of Luther's doctrine in this country. Finland is divided into ſeven provinces, Finland Proper, Aland, Eaſt Bothnia, Tavaſtia, or Tavaſtland, Nyland, Savolax, and Kymmenegards-Lehn.

FLANDERS, a country of the Netherlands, and at one time a conſiderable county, bounded on the north by the mouth of the Scheldt and the German Ocean, on the eaſt by Brabant and Hainaut, on the ſouth by Hainaut and a part of France, formerly called Artois and Picardy, and on the weſt by the Engliſh Channel and Artois. Its greateſt length is about 60 miles, and its breadth about 50. It contained 30 cities or walled towns, a great number of market-towns, 1154 villages, and 48 abbies, beſides a great number of priories, colleges, and monaſteries. The towns are ſituated ſo near together that the Spaniards who followed Philip II. ſuppoſed that all Flanders was but one town. Since that time, this county has ſuffered very ſeverely from almoſt continual wars. Flanders has been generally divided into three parts : Flemiſh Flanders, where they ſpeak the language of the country ; French Flanders, where they ſpeak the Walloon language ; and Imperial or Auſtrian Flanders, on account of the county of Aloſt, which has for a long time been dependent on the empire. The firſt extends from the North Sea and the Scheldt to the river Lys, and contains Ghent, Bruges, Ypres, Sluys, Oſtend, Nieuport, Dunkirk, Furnes, Bergues-Saint-Vinoc, Courtray, Oudenarde, Caſſel, Gravelines, &c. The ſecond, or French Flanders, contains the towns of Lille, Douay, Tournay, and Orchies. The third is ſituated between the Scheldt and the Dender, and contains the towns and diſtricts of Aloſt, Hulſt, Axel, Aſſenede, and Bochoult. Flanders has been otherwiſe divided, into French, Auſtrian, and Dutch Flanders ; but in a country ſo much expoſed to the depredations of ambitious or tyrannical ſtates, the limits of each muſt be uncertain ; at preſent the whole has been conquered by the armies of the French republic, and great part long conſidered as French dominions, Lille, Dunkirk, and ſeveral other towns having been comprehended in the department of the North, in the new diviſion of France, before hoſtilities were commenced, or perhaps even thought of. In the year 621, Leteric was made grand foreſter of Flanders, by Clotaire II. king of France, as a marriage portion with his daughter, Richilde : and Flanders continued to be governed by princes, with the title of Grand Foreſter, till the year 863. Baldwin, ſurnamed Iron-arm, was created count of Flanders, by Charles the Bald, king of France, whoſe daughter he had married. In the fifteenth century, the archduke Maximilian, marrying the daughter of Charles the Bold, the county went with her to the houſe of Auſtria. The northern part of the county was ceded to the States General, partly by the peace of Munſter, and partly by the barrier treaty, in 1715. In the year 1667, the ſouthern part was ſeized by France. The climate is temperate and wholeſome ; the ſoil, in general, is fertile and fit for tillage. In ſome places the fertility is uncommonly great. The land bears all kinds of corn and vegetables. Flax is a great ſource of riches to the country. The paſture grounds are excellent, and nouriſh a valuable breed of cattle, which produce rich cheeſe and butter. The breed of horſes and ſheep is alſo conſiderable. The Flemings were at one time the principal manufacturers of Europe ; from them the Engliſh were taught the art of weaving, and perhaps too the art of agriculture. The moſt beautiful table-linen is yet the manufacture of this the lace is ſuperior, perhaps, to all others. The principal rivers are the Scheldt and the Lys.

FLORENCE, a city of Italy, and capital of Tuſcany, ſituated on the river Arno, at the foot of the Appennines; firſt founded by the ſoldiers of Sylla; embelliſhed and enlarged by the triumvirs; deſtroyed by Totila; and rebuilt by Charlemagne. The environs are beautiful, rich, and populous, containing, as is ſaid, 6000 country houſes. The circumference of the city is about two leagues; the fortifications conſiſt only in a wall and ditch, with two or three forts, which defend it, and command a part of the town. This city, is, next to Rome, the moſt beautiful in Italy, and by ſome even preferred to Rome itſelf. The buildings are magnificent, moſt of the ſtreets clean, and paved with ſquare ſtones, ſo as to appear like a rock made level : they are generally winding, and many of them too narrow for carriages to paſs each other. They reckon ſeventeen public places, or ſquares; ſeven fountains, conſtantly playing; ſix pillars or columns, two pyramids, 160 beautiful ſtatues, placed either in the public ſquares, or in the ſtreets, or in the front of ſome palaces; one metropolitan church, twelve collegiate, and forty-four parochial; thirty-five convents for men, ſixty for women, thirty-ſeven hoſpitals, and about 9000 houſes. The number of inhabitants, in the year 1761, were found to be 72,000. The metropolitan church was built in the 13th century, of Gothic architecture, the cupola has the form of an octagon, and the deſign ſo bold, that Michael Angelo judged it inimitable; it is 140 feet fron one angle to the other, and 270 feet in height. Moſt of the churches contain a great number of the moſt beautiful paintings and ſtatues by the firſt maſters of Italy. In the Palazzo Pitti, which is the reſidence of the grand duke, is a library, containing about 35,000 volumes, with a great number of pictures by Raphael, Rubens, Titian, Andrea-del-Sarto, Tintoret, Guercino, &c. The Palazzo Vecchio, or old palace, contains a room 172 feet long, and 70 wide, for public entertainments; in which the moſt celebrated actions of the republic are painted, by Vaſari, in freſco; in the corners are four great hiſtorical pictures by Cigoli Ligozzi and Paſſignani. Both palaces have a communication with the famous gallery, which is indeed an inexhauſtible fund of entertainment in antique ſculpture and painting; open to the public from day-light till evening, except between the hours of one and three. Here ſtrangers have the freeſt acceſs; either walking about the open corridors at their leiſure, or attending in the cabinets by the Cicerones, who look for a handſome gratuity at your departure. This gallery contains a wonderful collection of paintings, ſtatues, buſts, drawings, bronzes, medals, cameos, intaglios, precious ſtones, &c. with a numerous and valuable library, both of printed books and manuſcripts. A celebrated ſociety was inſtituted here for the improvement of the Italian language, who ſtyled themſelves Academia della Cruſca, the deſign of the inſtitution being to throw out, like bran, all words which are not Tuſcan. The Florentines, however, are remarkable for ſpeaking the language ill, and with a guttural accent, though they write it with the utmoſt elegance, which gave riſe to the proverb, Lingua Toſcana, in bocca Romana. There are ſeveral theatres in Florence, all open during the Carnival, which begins the day after Chriſtmas-day, and laſts till Aſh-Wedneſday; at other times one of them only is open, except in Lent and Advent. The two principal are the Pergola, finiſhed in 1755; and the new Opera-houſe, firſt opened in the year 1779. This is very elegant, but the ſtage is not ſo ſpacious as in the Pergola. There is a little theatre, di Santa Maria lata, for burlettas; and another, which is larger, wherein comedies are performed. The manufactures of Florence are chiefly ſilks and ſatins, of excellent fabric. The woollen manufacture, to which it owed the greateſt part of its opulence and ſplendour, now ſcarcely ſupplies the common people. Their jewelry is fallen to nothing. At Doccia, three leagues from the city, is a manufacture of porcelaine. The Florentines have been long famous for their moſaic work, which is very different from the Roman; much more expenſive, and leſs beautiful : it is made of the finer marbles, agates, jaſpers, and other natural hard ſtones, ſawn thin, and inlaid in form of birds, flowers, &c. The wine of the neighbourhood is excellent, and they have a conſiderable trade for it both in Italy and other countries. Anciently, the city of Florence, with its diſtricts, formed a republic, having purchaſed its freedom of the emperor Rodolphus, for the ſum of 60,000 guilders. In the year 1530, the republican conſtitution was deſtroyed, and Alexander de Medicis appointed duke, by the emperor, Charles V. under the title of grand duke of Tuſcany. On the death of Gaſton de Medecis, in the year 1737, Florence, with the reſt of the duchy, fell to the duke of Lorrain, who afterwards became emperor. The Florentin is one of the moſt fertile countries of Italy; Florence is ſituated 125 miles NNW. Rome. Long. 28. 56. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 47. N.

FLORES, one of the Azore iſlands, about ten leagues long and three broad; it contains two towns and ſome hamlets; Santa Cruz is the capital, but Lagens is the moſt populous. The number of inhabitants in the whole is about 1300 or 1400. It takes its name from the multitude of flowers which grow wild in every part of this iſland. Long. 13. 13. W. Ferro. Lat. 39. 34. N.

FLORESZTI, a town of European Turkey, in Moldavia : 60 miles E. Stephanowze.

FLORIDA, a country of North America, bounded on the north by Georgia; on the eaſt by the Atlantic, on the ſouth by the Gulf of Mexico, and on the weſt by the Miſſiſippi. This country is ſaid to have been diſcovered by Sebaſtian Cabot, in the year 1496, 18 years before it was known to the Spaniards. The air in ſummer is exceedingly hot, but in ſeveral places pure and wholeſome; the winter is commonly temperate, though ſometimes the cold deſtroys the oranges, and the rivers are covered with ice. The ſoil is rich and fertile, particularly in Weſt Florida, where oftentimes, in the ſame year, the inhabitants have two or three harveſts of maize. The country abounds in oaks, cypreſs, palms, cedars, pines, cheſnuts, and ſaſſafras, the beſt in America. Mulberries, oranges, peaches, plumbs, cocoa-nuts, and melons grow in great plenty, with other fruits of an excellent flavour. Olive-trees and vines grow naturally, and were found there by the Europeans; cotton grows wild, and in plenty; as alſo flax and hemp. The cabbage-tree, ſo called from the ſuppoſed reſemblance of the head to the cabbage-plant in taſte, grows here, and furniſhes a food, agreeable, light, and wholeſome. The coaſts are low, ſandy, and full of ſhallows; they furniſh a prodigious number of oyſters, large and ſmall. Among the rich productions of the country may be reckoned cochineal, both wild and cultivated; indigo is common, and amber is found along the ſouthern coaſt. In the weſtern part are numerous herds of cattle and ſheep; hogs abound in every part, whoſe fleſh is ſuppoſed to obtain a peculiar excellence of flavour from their food, which conſiſts chiefly of acorns and cheſnuts. In the foreſts and deſerts are found ſeveral ſpecies of wild beaſts, as the panther, wild cat, buffalo, fox, hare, goat, rabbit, otter, racoon, flying ſquirrel, armadillo, opoſſum, guano, and ſeveral ſorts of ſerpents. Birds are in variety, and numerous; among others, are found the crane, heron, gooſe, wild duck, pigeon, partridge, thruſh, jay, hawk, maccaw, and a great number of others. The rivers abound in fiſh, but are at the ſame time infeſted with voracious alligators. In the year 1564, the French began to form a ſmall eſtabliſhment in Florida, from which they were driven the year following by the Spaniards, who then began to form ſettlements themſelves. In the year 1763, Florida was ceded to England, in exchange for the Havanna, which had been taken from the Spaniards. While in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, it was divided into two governments, Eaſt and Weſt Florida, ſeparated by the Apalachicola. Eaſt Florida extends much farther ſouth than Weſt Florida. The Gulf of Mexico waſhing the weſtern coaſt from Lat. 25. to Lat. 30. N. whereas the moſt ſouthern part of Weſt Florida is in Lat. 29. 30. N. The form of Eaſt Florida is triangular, the baſe toward the north being 160 miles in breadth from eaſt to weſt; near the ſouthern extremity about 40, and about 350 from north to ſouth. Along the coaſts are a great number of bays and ſmall iſlands. The ſoil near the ſea coaſts is ſandy and barren, but becomes of a better quality farther inland. The productions are chiefly rice and indigo. Weſt Florida is about 320 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from 40 to 80 in width from north to ſouth; the river Miſſiſippi bounds it on the weſt, and Apalachicola bounds it on the eaſt. The country is pleaſant, and the ſoil exceedingly fertile. The coaſts are flat, and riſe by almoſt inſenſible degrees into hills, which are covered with a beautiful verdure, and ſhaded with trees, ſuch as the mulberry, cedar, cocoa-nut, vanilla, cabbage-tree, palm, &c.

In many places vines are cultivated, which produce grapes equal in ſize and flavour to the beſt muſcadine. The principal place of Eaſt Florida is St. Auguſtine; and Penſacola is the capital of Weſt Florida. During the American war, in the year 1781, Florida was taken by the Spaniards, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1783.

FLUSHING, or Vliſſengen, or Fleſſingue, a ſea-port town of the Dutch State of Zealand, in the iſle of Walcheren, on the north ſide of an arm of the Scheldt, and defends the paſſage not of that river only, but all the iſlands of Zealand, of which it is one of the moſt important keys; it was on this account that Charles V. when he abdicated his crown, particularly enjoined his ſon, Philip, to take care and preſerve it ſafe: and that prince, when he left the port, in 1559, to take poſſeſſion of the kingdom of Spain, commanded a caſtle to be built to defend the town, which was however never executed, on account of the troubles that happened ſoon after. The port lies between two moles that break the waves of the ſea, which enters the town by means of two canals, forming two baſtions, ſo that loaded veſſels may ſail into the town, to the great convenience of the merchants. It was but a ſmall place before the 15th century, when Adolphus de Bourgogne, the lord of the place, ſurrounded it with walls; ſince which it has become a celebrated port, and is now, next to Middleburg, the richeſt town in the province of Zealand. The emperor, Charles V. erected it into a marquiſate in 1551, which the prince of Orange purchaſed, together with the marquiſate of Ter-Vere, for 146,000 florins. The Stadthouſe, built according to the model of that at Amſterdam, is a ſuperb building, and well deſerves the attention of travellers. The inhabitants of Sluys pillaged this town in 1485. The States General ſeized it on the 27th of April, 1573, by means of ſeven boats filled with ſoldiers, ſent by the prince of Orange from the Brill. When they landed, they hanged the Spaniſh commander, Francis Paciotti, one of the greateſt engineers of his time, and the friend of the duke of Alva; they pillaged the churches and cloiſters, and made themſelves dreaded both by land and ſea, taking likewiſe the town of Vere, and defeating a fleet of Spaniſh ſhips, commanded by the duke of Medina-Celi: the duke of Alva and the prince of Parma endeavoured to retake it, but in vain. On the 29th of January, 1574, the Fluſhingers took ſeveral Spaniſh veſſels, which were ſent from Antwerp to the ſuccour of Middleburg, then beſieged by the confederates. The States pledged this with ſome other towns to queen Elizabeth, as a ſecurity for her aſſiſtance, and ſurrendered it to the earl of Leiceſter, who was made governor, the 29th of October, 1585, and arrived the ſame year with 6000 ſoldiers, and above 500 gentlemen. In the year 1616, it was reſtored, with the other towns, to the States, by the negociation of John Olden Barnevelt, ambaſſador to James I. Fluſhing was the birth place of Adrian de Ruyter, who, from a ſailor and pilot, became admiral of the United Provinces: 28 miles NE. Oſtend. Long. 21. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 29. N.—On the 30th January, 1795, this town ſurrendered to the troops of the French republic.

FOIX, before the revolution, a country of France, on the banks of the Arriege, and divided into Upper and Lower. The ſoil of the latter is fertile in corn, fruit, and wine; the former is more hilly and leſs fertile, but abounds in game, and the vallies produce excellent paſturage. Mines of iron abound; thoſe of ſilver, copper, and lead are neglected; there are likewiſe quarries of marble, jaſper, &c. and many medicinal ſprings. It was once an independant county, united to the crown of France by Henry IV. The principal towns were Foix, Taraſcon, Ax, Pamiers, Saverdun, Lezat, Mas d'Azil, and Montaut, all of which are in the department of the Arriege.

FOIX, a town of France, in the department of the Arriege, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Taraſcon; ſuppoſed to have been founded by the Phocians, whence the name corrupted into Foix. It contains about 3500 inhabitants, and is defended by a caſtle, on a rock: 3 leagues N. Taraſcon. Long. 19. 16. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. 58. N.

FO-KIEN, a province of China, bounded on the north by the province of Tche-kiang, on the eaſt by the Chineſe Sea, on the ſouth by Quang-tong, and on the weſt by Kiang-ſi. This is one of the leaſt, and yet one of the richeſt provinces of the empire; its ſituation is commodious for navigation and commerce, the climate is hot, but the air is very pure and healthy. As part of it borders upon the ſea, they catch great quantities of fiſh, which are dried and ſalted, in order to be carried into the midland provinces of the empire. Its ſhores are very uneven, by reaſon of the number and variety of its bays; there are many fortreſſes built to guard the coaſts. It contains nine fou, or cities of the firſt rank, and 60 hien, or cities of the third rank; among the nine fou is reckoned Tai-ouan, capital of the iſland of Formoſa. Its mountains, by the induſtry of the Chineſe, are almoſt every where diſpoſed into a kind of amphitheatres, with terraces placed one above another, and all covered with rice; the fields are all watered by great rivers, and ſprings that iſſue from the mountains, which the huſbandmen conduct in ſuch a manner as to overflow the rice whenever they pleaſe, as it grows beſt in watery ground; they have the ſecret of raiſing the water to the top of the higheſt mountains, which they convey from one mountain to another by pipes of bamboo, found in great quantities in this province. The province of Fokien abounds with every thing that grows in moſt other provinces of the empire; the commerce which the inhabitants have with Japan, the Philippine Iſlands, Formoſa, Java, Camboya, Siam, &c. renders it extremely rich. They have muſk, precious ſtones, quickſilver, ſilk, hempen cloth, calico, ſteel, and all ſorts of utenſils, wrought to the greateſt perfection; and they import from other countries, cloves, cinnamon, pepper, ſandal-wood, amber, coral, and many other commodities of this nature. Its mountains are covered with trees fit for building of ſhips; they have mines of lead and iron; and it is ſuppoſed they have alſo gold and ſilver, but it is forbidden to dig for theſe under pain of death. Every city has its particular dialect, which is very incommodious to travellers. Fou-tcheou is the capital.

FONTAINEBLEAU, a town of France, in the department of the Seine and Marne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Melun; celebrated for its magnificent palace, the general autumnal reſidence of the kings of France, thus deſcribed by cardinal Bentivoglio: "Fontainebleau is a vaſt palace, worthy of a great prince as the king of France, and though there are many piles, joined to each other at different times, without order or ſymmetry, forming a confuſed maſs of buildings of different architecture; this confuſion has nevertheleſs an air of ſurpriſing majeſty and grandeur. It ſtands in a bottom, and has nothing pleaſant when the country and trees are deprived of their verdure, ſurrounded by a vaſt foreſt, in the midſt of ſmall hills crowned with rocks, which produce nothing to ſupport life, or pleaſe the eye. As there is a great number of deer, the king comes to take the diverſion of the chace, and affords by his preſence a relief which it has not of itſelf. The gardens are neat and very extenſive, and beſides the grand fountain, which, from the excellency of the water, gave name to the place, there is a great number of others to adorn this charming reſidence." The foreſt of Fontainebleau was anciently called the Foreſt of Bierre, and is ſaid to contain 26,480 acres; the figure is round, and the town and chateau are in the centre. The town of Fontainebleau conſiſts of one principal ſtreet, of conſiderable length, and ſeveral ſmaller. FORMOSA, an iſland in the Chineſe Sea, ſeparated from the province of Fo-kien, in China, by a ſtrait about 60 miles where narroweſt. The iſland is about 240 miles in length from north to ſouth, and 60 from eaſt to weſt, in its broadeſt part : but greatly contracted at each extremity. It does not ſeem to have been known to the Chineſe before the year 1436, nor was it then ſettled by them, being conſidered as a barren uncultivated country. The Dutch formed an eſtabliſhment in the weſtern part, in 1634, and built the fort of Zealand, which ſecured to them the principal port of the iſland ; but they were driven from thence in 1659, or 1661, by a celebrated Chineſe pirate, who made himſelf maſter of all the weſtern part, which afterwards ſubmitted, in 1682, to the authority of Kang-hi, emperor of China. A long chain of mountains from north to ſouth divides it into two parts. That part only which is ſituated to the weſt of the mountains belongs to China. The eaſtern part is but little known. The coaſts are rocky and high, without any harbours or creeks : there being but one bay at the mouth of a river, and this is ſo narrow, and ſo well defended by forts and high rocks on each ſide, that there is no entering it by ſurpriſe, though when the ſhips are once got in, they are ſafe, and ſheltered from all winds. That part of Formoſa which the Chineſe poſſeſs, preſents extenſive and fertile plains, watered by a great number of rivulets that fall from the eaſtern mountains. Its air is pure and wholeſome, and the earth produces in abundance corn, rice, and the greater part of other grains. Moſt of the Indian fruits are found here, ſuch as oranges, bananas, pine-apples, guavas, papaws, cocoa-nuts, and part of thoſe of Europe, particularly peaches, apricots, figs, raiſins, cheſnuts, pomegranates, water-melons, &c. Tobacco, ſugar, pepper, camphor, and cinnamon, are alſo common. Horſes, ſheep, and goats, are very rare in this iſland ; there are even few hogs, although theſe animals abound in China : domeſtic poultry, ſuch as fowls, geeſe, and ducks, are exceedingly plentiful ; pheaſants alſo are ſometimes ſeen, and monkeys and ſtags have multiplied ſo much, that they wander through the country in large flocks. The inhabitants of Formoſa rear a great number of oxen, which they uſe for riding, from a want of horſes and mules : they accuſtom them early to this kind of ſervice, and, by daily exerciſe, train them to go as well as horſes : theſe oxen are furniſhed with a bridle, ſaddle, and crupper. Wholeſome water fit for drinking is the only thing wanted in the iſland of Formoſa : it is very extraordinary, that every kind of water in it is deadly poiſon to ſtrangers, for which no remedy has hitherto been found. There are few mulberry-trees in Formoſa, conſequently little ſilk is made in the country ; numerous manufactures, however, would ſoon be introduced into it, were the Chineſe permitted indiſcriminately to tranſport themſelves thither, and to form eſtabliſhments in the iſland. Thoſe who go to it muſt be protected by paſſports from the Chineſe mandarins, and theſe paſſports are ſold at a dear rate ; ſecurities are beſides required. They fear, and with great reaſon, eſpecially ſince the Tartar emperors have been on the throne, that if any revolt ſhould happen in Formoſa, its influence might ſpread, and occaſion great diſturbance in the whole empire : on this account a garriſon is kept there of 10,000 men, which they take care to change every three years, or oftener if they judge neceſſary. Beſides the capital, Tai-ouan, the Chineſe have alſo two other cities and ſome villages, which they inhabit alone ; for they do not permit the Indians, who are their ſubjects, to live among them : they ſuffer none to remain but thoſe who are either their ſlaves or domeſtics. Theſe Indians are united into 45 villages, 36 of which lie to the north, and nine towards the ſouth. The northern villages are very populous, and the houſes are built almoſt after the Chineſe manner. The habitations of the ſouthern iſlanders are only heaps of huts or cottages of earth. Their ordinary food is rice, other ſmall grain, and the game which they catch by courſing, or kill with their arms. Their favourite arms are lances, which they dart to the diſtance of 60 or 80 feet, with the greateſt dexterity and preciſion. They uſe bows and arrows, and can kill a bird on the wing with as much certainty as an European ſportſman could with a fuſee. The eaſtern part of the iſland is mountainous, and inhabited by a people courteous and honeſt, ready to aſſiſt each other, careleſs of gold and ſilver, which they conſider of no value ; never giving offence, and never forgiving an injury ; as the Chineſe have found to their coſt, to whom they are irreconcileable enemies, for having formerly maſſacred the inhabitants of a ſmall town, for the ſake of ſome ingots of gold which they ſaw there. They ſubſiſt chiefly on the cattle which they breed, and fiſh which they catch in the rivers and on the coaſts. Their mountains are ſaid to contain mines of gold and ſilver. In the year 1782, a terrible earthquake almoſt deſtroyed the iſland ; the account from Tai-ouan ſays, that of 27 ſhips that were in the harbour, 12 diſappeared, two were daſhed to pieces, and 10 ſo damaged as to be unfit for ſervice ; beſides upwards of 100 ſmaller veſſels ſwallowed up or daſhed to pieces with their cargoes, among which were 100,000 buſhels of rice. The inundation of the ſea was ſo great, as almoſt to cover the whole iſland ; the proviſions were either ſwept away or ſpoiled, and the crops entirely loſt. The capital of Formoſa is Tai-ouan, a name which the Chineſe give to the whole iſland. Between Formoſa and the continent are a great number of ſmall iſlands, called Pong-hou by the Chineſe, and Piſcadores by the Europeans ; they form a ſmall archipelago ; the principal of which is only inhabited by a Chineſe garriſon, under the command of a mandarin. Long. 137. 30. to 139. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 22. 5. to 25. 20. N.

FOULI, or Fuily, or Pholey, a country of Africa, ſituated on the ſides of the river Senegal, extending 160 leagues from eaſt to weſt; the boundaries from north to ſouth are unknown. The country is populous, the ſoil fertile, and capable of furniſhing an advantageous commerce, if the inhabitants were induſtrious. They are in general of a tawny complexion, tho' many of them are completely black. It is ſuppoſed that their alliances with the Moors have given them that mixed colour, between the true olive and the black. However indolent they may be in puſhing the trade of their country, they are diligent as farmers and graziers, and raiſe millet, rice, tobacco, cotton, peaſe, roots, and fruits with abundance of care; nor are they leſs expert in rearing cattle, in which conſiſts great part of their traffic with the neighbouring countries. As their chief wealth conſiſts in their cattle, ſome of them lead a wandering life, and roam about from field to field, from country to country, with large droves of cows, ſheep, goats, and horſes; for although they have ſome fixed habitations, yet they uſe them but little, removing them, as the dry or wet ſeaſons require, from low to the high lands, reſiding in no one place longer than the paſture for their cattle will admit. This hard laborious life is greatly increaſed by the continual neceſſity they are under of defending themſelves and their cattle againſt the depredations of thoſe fierce animals with which the country abounds: lions, tigers, and elephants, aſſaulting them from the land, and crocodiles from the rivers. At night they collect their flocks within a circle of tents and huts, in which they live, and where they light fires to terrify thoſe animals from approaching them. The king of this country is called Siratick, and though he ſeldom appears with the badges of majeſty, he is a prince of great authority over his ſubjects, and as much reſpected by his neighbours as any one on the coaſt. Although none but princes of the blood can be called to the throne, yet the crown deſcends not from father to ſon, but from brother to brother, or nephew to nephew. The people of Fouli are celebrated by travellers as an extremely hoſpitable nation; all perſons, without diſtinction of country, being freely admitted into their huts, and treated with the beſt accommodations they can afford; nor is their humanity in any other particular leſs commendable; for as ſoon as any of them has the misfortune to fall into ſlavery, all the reſt join ſtock to redeem him. Their arms are compoſed of bows and arrows, lances, ſwords, daggers, and occaſionally a kind of ſmall fuſee, all of which they uſe with great dexterity and addreſs, ſuperior to moſt negro nations, particularly in hunting, a diverſion in great eſteem among them. Elephants, lions, tigers, and the fierceſt animals are the game they purſue. Twenty or thirty of them, ſome on foot ſome on horſeback, follow the chace, and ſeldom return but laden with the ſpoils of ſome of thoſe deſperate animals. The elephants' teeth, the lions, leopards, and tigers' ſkins they ſell, and the fleſh is ſmoked and dried for uſe and winter ſtore. In ſuch numbers are the elephants bred here, that they are ſeen in droves of 200 together, plucking up the ſmall trees, and deſtroying whole fields of corn; pleaſure, therefore alone is not the object of their hunting, but neceſſity and ſelf-preſervation.

FRANCE, a country of Europe, bounded on the north by the Engliſh Channel and the Netherlands, on the eaſt by Germany, Swiſſerland, and Italy; on the ſouth by the Mediterranean Sea and Spain; and on the weſt by the Atlantic; about 200 leagues long, and 188 wide. At the decline of the Roman power, this country, then called Gaul, was invaded by the Franks, a people who inhabited the borders of the Rhine, and entirely ſubdued by them, under the conduct of their leader, or king, Clovis. Theſe Franks were tall of ſtature, their hair light, and eyes blue; adroit, active, and courageous, they ruſhed forwards on their enemies, ſwift as an arrow; they put to death for the moſt part thoſe whom they conquered; the ſpoils of the vanquiſhed were their harveſt; they dwelt in foreſts and in marſhes, where their women reſided; their cabins were of wood, conſtructed without art, and formed into ſcattered villages, without order. Theſe ſavages, united together under the command of a prince, went with him to war, without being under his ſubjection in time of peace: their princes were rather the chiefs of the ſoldiers than kings of the people; they paid him no tribute, they divided the ſpoils, and they made him preſents. Such were the conquerors of Gaul; ſuch were the founders of the French monarchy. This nation afterwards became Chriſtians, at leaſt in name, if ſuch can be called ſo, who ſubmit to ceremonies of which they neither knew the deſign nor end; however, they inſenſibly loſt their ancient manners. Their democracy was effaced, and a military ariſtocracy ſucceeded. Their kings were always taken from the ſame family, which was that of Clovis. It produced but few great men. Theodebert is perhaps the only one who truly deſerved the name. The generals were elected by the grandees, and theſe generals, under the name of mayors, became inſenſibly the chiefs of the ſtate, made their kings to be forgotten; governed inſtead of them, and ſat in their place. They could indeed perform nothing without the general aſſembly of the nation, which reſtrained their power. Theſe aſſemblies were compoſed of the clergy and the nobility, whoſe conſent was neceſſary both for war and peace, and the ordonnances of the prince, or rather of the mayor, could only be ratified or made into laws by them. But the mayors, by their great virtues, or by the ſplendour of their actions, generally influenced their deciſions. This office in time became hereditary; Pepin Heriſtel governed all France for twenty-ſeven years; his widow and his grandſon governed after him. This grandſon was Charles Martel, a man worthy the power which he claimed, and who deſerved to give kings to France, ſince he was the governor and defender, defeating the Mahometans, who meant to invade France, as they had already invaded Spain. He might have taken the title of king, he was contented with that of duke. Pepin, his ſon, propoſed to the pope to decide which ought to bear the name of king; a prince without capacity, or a miniſter who governed with glory. The pope had need of Pepin; he decided that the miniſter ought to be king, and Pepin uſurped the crown. He rendered himſelf agreeable to the clergy, by reſtoring to them the eſtates which his father had taken from them; he made himſelf reſpected by the nobility, by his genius and his power; the nation knew nothing of their ancient kings but their name, and the deciſion of the pope was ſufficient to influence them: not only the mayors of the palace uſurped this power, but the governors of diſtant provinces, under weak princes, became likewiſe abſolute on their eſtates. The principal commanders of the provinces were called ducs, or dukes, that is to ſay generals; thoſe of towns or counties leſs extenſive had the title of comte; a word invented in the Lower Roman Empire, the uſe of which was adopted by the Franks. The titles or offices of duke and comte were neither hereditary nor for life, but merely depended on the will of the ſovereign. The irruption of the Normans into the maritime parts of France, induced Charles the Simple to grant to Rollo, their chief, that country, which has been ſince called Normandy, in alloden ſempiternam. The word allode, or alleu, marks full property; and is diſtinguiſhed from fudum, or feodum, fief, which at its origin was a kind of commandery, granted for ſervice in war; and which did not paſs from father to ſon without a particular grant from the king. After the death of Charles the Simple and Rodolph, other dukes and comtes, who had grants of land in fief, rendered themſelves abſolute proprietors. According to the ancient inſtitutions, the comtes ſhould have been ſubordinate to the dukes, but they, in places where they found themſelves poſſeſſed of ſtrength or power, acknowledged the ſupremacy of neither dukes nor kings. It would be impoſſible to give the true bounds of the different eſtates, on account of the different changes which theſe uſurpers introduced. All of them held their eſtates without any other title than that of power; but after they had rejected the princes who remained of the race of Charlemagne, and had elected one of themſelves, Hugh Capet, duke of France, and comte of Paris, to be king, they became peaceable poſſeſſors. The new king was obliged to ſupport and maintain thoſe who had ſupported himſelf. On the other hand, theſe lords were under the neceſſity of leaving their vaſſals in poſſeſſion of their fiefs, which were conſidered as patrimonial property. Theſe vaſſals, for the moſt part, owed liege homage to their lords, and in ſome countries where the lords had better preſerved their rights, the vaſſals were ſupported in poſſeſſion of their lands, on paying a certain ſum at each alteration, or exchange of the owners. This they called redeeming the fief, or the right of redemption, and from that time all kinds of fiefs in France became patrimonial, like other goods. Hugh Capet was no more ſovereign in France than the emperor is at this day. The dukes and comtes were ſovereigns, as abſolute in their eſtates, and as conſiderable in the ſcale of princes, as the princes of the empire. This ſtate continued until the time of Philip Auguſtus, who by his great victories re-united moſt of the great provinces to his dominions; ſince which, his ſucceſſors, either by arms, by ſucceſſion, by donation, or other titles of acquiſition, have annexed all the diſmembered parts into one eſtate. The kingly government of France had continued from Clovis, who eſtabliſhed himſelf at Soiſſons, in the year 486. Others call Pharamond the firſt king of France, who began to reign in the year 420. Hugh Capet obtained the crown of France in the year 987, and in the year 1793, on the 21ſt of January, Louis XVI. one of his deſcendants, was executed on a public ſcaffold, at Paris, and with him ended the monarchy of France. His ſon, a minor, remained in priſon to his death, which happened in the month of June, 1795. Thus, France, after continuing a monarchy upwards of 1200 years, has been by the national aſſembly declared a republic; with the fall of monarchy, or indeed before, all titles of nobility were aboliſhed; and all eccleſiaſtical domains, ſuch as abbies, monaſteries, convents, &c. were decreed national property; all tithes were aboliſhed; the revenues of the higher orders of the clergy reduced, and the number leſſened; annuities were granted to the profeſſed; and to the parochial clergy a proviſion was granted, moderate, but perhaps ſuperior to what they had before received as vicars. The ancient diviſion into provinces, or governments, was alſo, by a ſolemn decree of the nation, changed into that of eighty-three departments, of which the iſland of Corſica made one. And, in the year 1793, a new calendar was formed, dividing the year into twelve months, of thirty days each, with five intercalary days, which are dedicated to national feſtivals, and called ſans-culotides. Each month is divided into decades, and the day of reſt is appointed for every tenth day, inſtead of every ſeventh. The religion of the French was the Catholic, of the church of Rome. In the year 1469, Louis XI. was honoured with the title of the moſt Chriſtian King, and the Eldeſt ſon of the Church, by pope Paul II. which title was continued to his ſucceſſors. Henry IV. by what was called the Edict of Nantes, granted the Proteſtants a free exerciſe of their religion, in the year 1590. This edict was revoked by Louis XIV. in the year 1685. By a late decree of the national convention, a free exerciſe of religion is allowed to all. This great revolution of France was not brought about without alarming the neighbouring powers of Europe, who entered into a formidable alliance; to what purpoſe has not been clearly or accurately explained, and perhaps not known to each other; but whatever the private views of each might be, their united aim ſeems to have been, the deſtruction of the democratic party, and the reſtoration of monarchy. Dreadful and bloody, the conteſt has been hitherto, and at the very lateſt day allowed by the preſs, the dreadful ſcene is not cloſed. France has hitherto been ſucceſsful. Pruſſia, Spain, and Holland, have made peace, and acknowledged the republic. The two moſt obſtinate and the moſt powerful enemies are yet in arms—Auſtria and England. If the ceſſation of hoſtilities had been univerſal, a recapitulation of events might probably have found a place here, but whatever private opinion may be, that opinion ſhall not be obtruded on the public, antecedent to events. There is no country of Europe more beautiful or more agreeable to live in than France; the air in general is pure and wholeſome, and the change of ſeaſons is leſs inconvenient than in almoſt any other. It is not ſubject to ſuch ſevere cold as Germany, nor to the violent heat of Italy and Spain. In the ſouthern parts the winters are indeed ſharp, but of ſhort duration. The ſeaſons are more regular than in England. The ſoil, diverſified by mountains and plains, is watered by a number of large and ſmall rivers, which ſerve at once to fertilize the country and convey merchandiſe from one extremity of the nation to the other. The induſtry of the inhabitants, joined to its natural advantages, renders it one of the moſt fertile countries in Europe. It abounds in corn, legumes, fruit, wines, oil, paſture, hemp, and flax, ſufficient for its own inhabitants, and much to ſpare. Here are mines of iron, lead, and copper, there are likewiſe ſome of ſilver and gold, but the laſt are not rich enough to defray the expences of working. The chief productions of France, for exportation, are wines, as Champagne, Burgundy, claret, &c. brandy, vinegar, fruit, ſuch as prunes and prunelloes, dried grapes, pears, apples, oranges, and olives; corn, ſalt, hemp, flax, ſilk, reſin, oil, ſoap, cork, kid ſkins, perfumes, drugs, &c. The manufactures are ſilks, ſuch as luſtrings, modes, brocades, velvets, &c. woollen cloth, linen, coarſe and fine, lace, paper, China, of exquiſite beauty and fineneſs, ſoap, &c. The French have for ſome years paſt obtained the ſecret from Spain, of making Caſtile ſoap, as it is called, and have very large manufactures both at Marſeilles and Toulon, and have thereby deprived the Spaniards of that valuable branch of trade. Nor is this the only benefit the French receive by this manufacture; for as one of the chief ingredients of making this ſoap is Levantine olive-oil, their large ſale for their ſoap gives them the advantage of conſtant back-freights from the Levant with theſe oils; which, it ſeems, has proved one means of the French advancing their Turkey trade upon the ruin of the Engliſh. As France is certainly the moſt populous and extenſive country of Europe, ſo its inland traffic is proportionate, and in many particulars far beyond any country in Europe; being carried on with great eaſe and little expence, by means of many large navigable rivers and canals. The arts and ſciences have always been encouraged in France. The art of engraving has obtained great excellence, architecture, civil and military, has attained a high degree of perfection, and the conſtruction of their ſhips has not been outdone even by the Engliſh themſelves. The principal rivers are the Seine, the Loire, the Garonne, and Rhone. France is ſaid to contain 400 cities or walled towns, 43,000 ſmall towns or villages, and 25,000,000 of inhabitants. Paris is the capital.

FRANCE (Iſle of), a part of France, ſo called before the revolution, being bounded by the rivers Seine, Marne, Oiſe, Aiſne, and Ourque. Paris was the capital, and ſituated in the centre.

FRANCESCAS, a town of France, in the department of the Lot and Garonne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Nerac: 2 leagues SE. Nerac, and 3¼ SW. Agen. Long. 18. 6. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 3. N.

FRANCFORT ON THE MAINE, an Imperial city of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, ſituated in a pleaſant, fertile, and healthy country, on the river Maine, by which it is divided into two parts; that on the north, which is the largeſt, and is properly called Francfort, the other on the ſouth ſide of the Maine is called Saxenhauſen; the whole divided into fourteen wards, two only of which are ſituated in Saxenhauſen. The kings of the Franks reſided here, as likewiſe the immediate ſucceſſors of Charlemagne: the emperors of Germany have been elected and crowned here to this time. Francfort is about a league and a half in circumference. The inner wall is lined with towers; beyond are ditches, filled with water, ramparts, baſtions, &c. The garriſon conſiſts of thirteen companies of ſoldiers. The principal ſtreets are handſome, the others are narrow. The Roman Catholics have three churches, and the Lutherans ſix. The Jews are confined to a narrow ſtreet, where they are ſhut up every night; they have a ſynagogue, a ſeminary, and an hoſpital; but they are excluded from the public walks, ſuffer great indignities, yet ſtill find it their intereſt to reſide here. Among the archives of the town-houſe is kept, in a caſket of gold, the golden bull of the emperor Charles IV; which is a parchment book of forty-three quarto leaves, containing the fundamental inſtitutes of the empire, written in Latin, in capital letters. Francfort is a place of conſiderable trade, which is aſſiſted by two annual fairs. The magiſtrates are divided into three benches; the firſt is compoſed of fourteen echevins, the ſecond of fourteen counſellors, the third is compoſed chiefly of tradeſmen and artificers. All affairs of importance are decided by the two former, out of whom two burgomaſters are annually choſen; the third bench executes offices relating to the police. Francfort is aſſeſſed 600 florins for the Roman month, and is taxed to the Imperial chamber 676 rixdollars 26 kruitzers. The territory of Francfort contains a great number of country houſes, and ſeveral villages. Francfort was taken by the French, in the year 1792, but ſoon after ſurrendered by them to the Pruſſians: 20 miles E. Mentz. Long. 26. 17. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. N.—In the year 1759, this city was taken by the French.

FRANCFORT ON THE ODER, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Middle Mark of Brandenburg, with an univerſity, founded, in the year 1506, by the elector, Joachim, and his brother, Albert; compoſed of Calviniſt profeſſors. It has beſides a noble academy, a ſociety for the promoting of arts and ſciences, two colleges, two fauxbourgs, and ſeveral churches: 12 miles SSW. Cuſtrin, and 48 E. Berlin. Long. 32. 22. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 24. N.—In the year 1759, this city was taken, and laid under contribution by the Ruſſians: at the ſame time the Auſtrians took poſſeſſion of the ſuburbs, and committed great diſorders: the troops entered on the 26th of July, and did not evacuate it till the 27th of Auguſt.

Franche Comté, before the revolution, a province of France, and anciently a part of the kingdom of Burgundy. Almoſt one half of the country is level, abounding in grain, wine, paſture, hemp, &c. The reſt is mountainous, but breeds excellent cattle, and produces ſome corn and wine. There are mines of copper, iron, lead, and ſilver, and ſome mineral ſprings, with quarries of alabaſter and marble. The principal rivers were the Saône, the Ougnon, and the Doubs. It is now divided into the three departments of Mount Jura, the Doubs, and Upper Saône.

FRANCONIA, a circle of Germany; bounded on the north by Meiſſen and Thuringia, on the eaſt by Bohemia and the Upper Palatinate, on the ſouth by Bavaria and Swabia, and on the weſt by the Lower Palatinate and the electorate of Mentz. It is ſituated near the centre of Germany, the form inclined to a circle, whoſe diameter is about 50 leagues. In the centre the land is fertile in corn, wine, fruit, &c.; but the frontiers are full of foreſts and mountains, and little cultivated. The principal river is the Maine. The inhabitants of many towns are Roman Catholics, though the principal part are Lutherans. The Calviniſts have ſome churches, and the Jews ſome ſynagogues. The ſtates which compoſe the circle of Franconia are either eccleſiaſtical or civil. The eccleſiaſtical princes are the biſhops of Bamberg, Wurzburg, and Aichſtett, and the grand maſter of the Teutonic order. The ſecular princes are, the prince of Culmbach; the marggrave of Anſpach; the counts of Henneberg, Schwarzenberg; the princes of Lowenſtein-Wertheim, Hohenlohe-Waldenburg, Hohenlohe-Neuenſtein, Caſtell, Wertheim, Rieneck, Erbach, Limburg-Geildorf, Limburg-Speckfeld, Seinſheim, Reigelſburg, Wiegentheid, Welzheim, and Hauſen; with the Imperial towns of Nuremberg, Rothenburg, Windſheim, Schweinfurt, and Weiſſenburg. In the military arrangement of the empire, being in time of peace fixed at 40,000 men, Franconia furniſhes 980 horſe, and 1902 foot; and, at the diviſion of 300,000 florins to the cheſt of the empere, this circle was rated at 22,696 florins 47 kruitzers.

FREDERICIA, a ſtrong ſea-port town of Denmark, in North Jutland, and dioceſe of Ripen; it is ſituated on the Little Belt, with a cuſtom-houſe, where all veſſels pay a toll. The circumference is extenſive, but not filled with houſes or people. It was firſt begun in 1651, by Frederic III. but the fortifications were ſcarcely completed, and the town built and properly inhabited, when the Swedes, in the year 1657, took it by ſtorm, and burnt a great part of it. At the concluſion of the war, both the fortifications and the town were repaired, and, in order to increaſe the number of its inhabitants, Chriſtian V. in 1682, granted a charter, which rendered Fredericia an aſylum for all bankrupts, whether natives or foreigners, and allowed the Calviniſts, Papiſts, and Jews the free exerciſe of their religion. This town was formerly exempt from the exciſe, which it now pays. The fortifications, though in good condition, are of ſo large compaſs that they would require a numerous garriſon to defend them. Fredericia has alſo ſeveral commercial privileges, but as it wants a good harbour, it cannot improve them to the beſt advantage. Here are two Lutheran churches (in one of which the ſervice is alternately performed in the Daniſh and German languages) a Calviniſt church, a Popiſh church, a ſynagogue, a grammar-ſchool, and good arſenal. A conſiderable quantity of tobacco is planted both within and without the walls. Long. 9. 44. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 37. N.

This ſum was advanced by the houſe of Auſtria, by which means the town became ſubject to that family. It was formerly an important fortreſs, but being taken ſeveral times by the Swedes and the French, it was diſmantled by the latter, in the year 1744. The ſtreets are broad and well paved. The principal church is a ſuperb edifice. Here is an univerſity, founded in 1457, by Albert IV. duke of Auſtria, with an academy and five colleges depending on it. Here are beſides ten convents, a commandery of the Teutonic order, and thirteen churches. It is generally provided with an Auſtrian garriſon. FRIBURG, or Freyburg, called Friburg in Uchland, to diſtinguiſh it from Friburg in the Briſgau, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of a canton to which it gives name, built in the year 1179, by Berthold IV. duke of Zahringen, whoſe uncle, Berthold III. had built a town of the ſame name, in the Briſgau, and whoſe ſon, Berthold V. was the founder of Bern. Theſe princes, who are vicars of the empire in the provinces of the ancient kingdom of Burgundy, had great difficulty to ſupport an authority always diſputed by the grand vaſſals. In fact, they poſſeſſed only that part of the kingdom which laid to the weſt of Mount Jura, and the circumſtance of their being ſtrangers made the nobility obey them with regret. It was therefore political wiſdom in them to ſtrengthen the part of the common people, to ſerve as a counterpoiſe to the unruly ambition of the nobility. Theſe dukes gave their new towns charters, or bulls, on the model of the city of Cologne. Thus a great number of families of the inferior nobility and neighbouring inhabitants, went with joy to eſtabliſh themſelves in an aſylum, which protected them againſt the tyranny of the greater barons. Berthold IV. granted to this Friburg the ſame privileges that his uncle had granted to Friburg in Briſgau. After the houſe of Zahringen became extinct, by the death of Berthold V. in 1218, the two towns of Bern and Friburg met with a different fate. Bern made an important ſtep towards independence, in putting itſelf under the immediate protection of the empire. Friburg came under the power of count Ulrich, of Kiburg, who had married the ſiſter of the laſt duke of Zahringen, without impeachment or derogation of their privileges. From the family of Kiburg it came into the poſſeſſion of the count of Habſburg, who was called to the empire, and became chief of the houſe of Auſtria, to which family it continued its attachment till the year 1449, when it put itſelf under the protection of the duke of Savoy, with a reſervation of its privileges and immunities. In 1481, it joined the grand confederacy, and became one of the cantons of Swiſſerland. The length of the whole canton is about forty miles, and its breadth about twenty. It is almoſt ſurrounded by the canton of Bern, except a narrow part which touches the lake of Neufchatel. The north weſt part of the country is more level than the reſt, and produces abundance of corn and fruit, the other parts are mountainous, but contain good paſtures, which feed great herds of cattle. The cheeſe made in this canton, particularly in the bailiwick of Gruyeres, is the beſt produced in Swiſſerland, and great quantities are exported to France and other countries. In ſome places they cultivate vineyards and make wine. There are ſeveral medicinal ſprings. The principal rivers are the Sanen, the Senſen, and the Broye, or Bruw. The inhabitants are Roman Catholics, under the biſhop of Lauſanne, in number 72,800, which are divided into ſeven towns, and 103 pariſhes. The language of the inhabitants in the town of Friburg is principally German; in the reſt of the canton, partly German and partly Patois, which is a mixture of German and French. The town of Friburg is ſituated on the Sanen, and almoſt ſurrounded by it. Part of it is built on an elevated rock, part of it in a deep vally, and towards the weſt it occupies a ſmall plain. The ſtreets are irregular, ſteep, clean, and tolerably wide; the houſes are well built, and ſome of them handſome, there are ſeveral churches and convents. It is ſurrounded with walls, towers, and ſharp rocks. Friburg contains ſome manufactures, but none that are important: 16 miles SW. Bern, and 27 NE. Lauſanne. Long. 24. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 50. FRIENDLY ISLANDS, a cluſter of iſlands in the Southern Pacific Ocean, of great extent, and upwards of 150 in number; ſome of which are large, and ſome lofty, with volcanoes. They are in general fertile, and well planted with cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees, plantains, ſugar-canes, yams, &c.: fowls are large and good; parrots and paroquets are found of various kinds; pigeons, with plenty of wild ducks and other water-fowl. The inhabitants were hoſpitable and kind, on which account captain Cook, who firſt diſcovered them, in the year 1773, gave them the name they bear; their number is ſuppoſed to be about 200,000. The climate is healthy; they themſelves are active and induſtrious, and acquainted with neither riches, want, nor oppreſſion. The ſea coaſts abound with fiſh, in catching which they are exceedingly expert, and on their coaſts are found great numbers and variety of ſhell-fiſh. They are exceedingly fond of iron; and will readily give the produce of the iſlands in exchange, ſuch as hogs, fowls, fiſh, yams, bread-fruit, plantains, cocoa-nuts, ſugar-canes, &c.; good water is ſcarce, or generally it is difficult for navigators to obtain it in a ſufficient quantity. Long. 184. 46. to 185. 45. FRIESACH, in Carinthia. This town was taken by the French in March 1797.

FRIESLAND, one of the ſtates of the United Netherlands, ſo called from the Friſons, a warlike people, whoſe country formerly extended from the Scheldt to the Weſer. The country of which we are now ſpeaking, is bounded on the north by the German Ocean, on the eaſt by Groningen and Overiſſel, on the ſouth by Overiſſel and the Zuyder Sea, and on the weſt by the Flie River. Frieſland in its air and ſoil reſembles Holland, eſpecially in the north-weſt parts, which lie lower than the ſea, and are particularly remarkable for fine paſtures, in which, beſides excellent oxen, cows, and ſheep, a great number of large horſes are bred, for ſale into Germany and other countries. In the more elevated parts is found good corn land, and the wheat is particularly eſteemed for the fineneſs of the ears and whiteneſs of the flour. Peat forms one of the principal articles of fuel, and towards the ſouth and ſouth-eaſt there are extenſive heaths and woods. The inhabitants, for want of ſandhills along the ſea coaſt, are under the neceſſity of ſecuring themſelves by means of dykes; which, though abſolutely neceſſary, yet are attended with vaſt expence. Formerly, when the care of theſe dykes were only the private concern of the proprietors of particular eſtates, they were very low, and frequently ſuffered to fall to decay, ſo as to be unable to withſtand the impetuoſity of the waves, eſpecially when driven by a ſtrong north-weſterly wind ; and by ſuch breaches the country has been laid under water, and great number of perſons periſhed, not to mention the loſs of their cattle. In order as much as poſſible to preſerve themſelves when under theſe calamities, the inhabitants raiſed ſeveral eminences, from 20 to 25 feet high, and of conſiderable circumference ; to which, unleſs by the rapidity of the inundations intercepted, they betook themſelves with their cattle and houſehold furniture, and there remained till the flood ſubſided. In proceſs of time houſes, or rather whole villages and towns, were built on this tumuli. In the year 1570, the dykes were ordered to be made higher and wider, at the charge of the public ; and ſince this the irruptions of the ſea have been leſs frequent. Frieſland may vie with Holland in the number of canals with which it is in all parts interſected ; and great is the convenience of theſe canals, both for the carrying off the ſuperfluous waters into the ſea, and likewiſe for facilitating traffic and intercourſe. The principal reaches from Harlingen through Franeker, as far as Lewarden and Dokkum, and Groningen, and even to the frontiers of Eaſt-Frieſland. In the whole province are 11 towns, and 336 villages. The inhabitants ſtill retain that ſtrong paſſion for liberty which diſtinguiſhed their anceſtors, together with their old cuſtoms and manner of living, even to the ancient Frieſen dialect and accent, which latter circumſtance renders the language of the country people in particular unintelligible to the other Netherlanders. Frieſland is famous for its woollen ſtuffs, but more eſpecially for its linen, which is the fineſt in Europe. Frieſland had princes of its own, afterwards dukes, and then kings; among whom Radbold II. was particularly famous. Theſe laſt were ſucceeded by podeſtats, elected from among the people. So early as the year 1436, part of Frieſland devolved to the houſe of Burgundy. The greater part of it, however, ſtill continues under podeſtats. In the year 1498, the emperor, Maximilian I. created duke Albert, of Saxony, hereditary governor of Frieſland ; and though this was done on condition that he ſhould maintain the people in their ancient liberties, yet would they never acknowledge him. In 1515, Charles V. purchaſed of George, duke of Saxony, his claim to this country, and reduced it under his own dominions ; but in the days of his ſon, Philip II. the Frieſons recovered their liberty, and acceded to the alliance of Utrecht. Lewarden is the capital.

FRIESLAND (Eaſt), a principality of Germany ; bounded on the north by the ſea, on the eaſt by the county of Oldenburg, on the ſouth by the biſhopric of Munſter, and on the weſt by Groningen ; about 38 miles from north to ſouth, and 36 from eaſt to weſt. The air is moiſt and thick, but much purified by ſea breezes ; the ſpring and harveſts are late, the land is flat, low, and defended by ſtrong and lofty dykes againſt the waves of the ſea. The land along the coaſts is rich and fertile, chiefly meadow land, with few corn fields. The cattle are of an extraordinary ſize and goodneſs, as are the ſheep and horſes. It is not uncommon for a ewe to yean four lambs. The butter and cheeſe are abundant and rich. In the centre of the country the ſoil is for the moſt part ſandy, interſperſed with fens and moors, in which the inhabitants dig peat for fuel, a circumſtance of the more importance as wood is ſcarce. Fowl and game are plentiful, and the geeſe in particular of an uncommon ſize, even to weigh as much as 24 pounds a-piece. One third of the principality is uncultivated. The principal river is the Ems, by means of which the trade and navigation of the country is very conſiderable. The exportation principally conſiſts in large horſes, horned cattle, cheeſe, butter, oats, beans, rape-ſeed, and fine linen which they ſell for Holland. Anciently, Eaſt Frieſland was divided into a great number of lordſhips, the greater part of which, in the year 1430, ſubmitted to Edzard, ſurnamed Cyrkſena, or Sirkſena, whoſe ſucceſſors became princes of the empire, in the year 1454, with the title of count. This family becoming extinct, in the year 1744, Frederick II. king of Pruſſia, ſeized on it, in conſequence of the expectancy granted to the houſe of Brandenburg by the emperor Leopold, in the year 1694. On the other hand, the houſe of Brunſwick Luneburg, in the perſon of George II. king of England, proteſted againſt it, and laid claim to the principality, on account of an hereditary union entered into, in the year 1691, with prince Chriſtian Eberhard : making his pretenſions known to the regency of Eaſt Frieſland, and to the aulic chamber of the empire ; but the king of Pruſſia denying the authority of the emperor or regency, and threatening to ſupport his actions by force of arms, he was ſuffered to remain in poſſeſſion. The inhabitants are partly Lutherans and partly Calviniſts ; the Catholics have a free toleration in many towns, and the Moravians at Emden, Leer, and Norden. The Jews are tolerated. The ancient language of the country is forgotten ; High German and Dutch are pretty equally ſpoken. The nobility, the towns, and the peaſants, form the ſtates, whoſe tranſactions with their princes, joined to the Imperial ordinances, ſerve for the laws of the country. The ſtates conſent to taxes, and raiſe them, the exciſe is their hands, and they yet retain ſome privileges. The principal towns are Aurich, Norden, and Emden. The aſſeſſment for the Roman month is fixed at 192 florins, and the tax to each chamber term 160 rix-dollars 86 kruitzers. The revenue to the ſovereign is about 300,000 rix-dollars.

The aſpect of the country is repreſented as dreary and uncomfortable, conſiſting of a chain of ſtupendous rocks, and continually covered with ſnow. Along the coaſts are a great number of inlets, or harbours, for the largeſt ſhips, with rocks near the ſhore, which, however, may be diſcovered by ſounding. The inhabitants are ſaid to be naturally as fair as Europeans, but that they go naked, and paint their bodies with the moſt gorgeous colours. Thoſe on the ſouth ſide are ſaid to be unciviliſed, treacherous, and barbarous; while thoſe on the oppoſite ſide are ſimple, affable, and perfectly harmleſs. The ſkins of wild animals are ſometimes uſed to cover their bodies, upon occaſions of extraordinary pomp, and their tents are made of poles, diſpoſed in a conical form, covered with ſkins, or the bark or leaves of trees. Sir Joſeph Banks, Dr. Solander, and ſome others, landed here in the month of January, 1768, which is the time of ſummer in that part of the globe, notwithſtanding which two of the company fell a ſacrifice only by ſleeping one night, and Dr. Solander himſelf hardly eſcaped. Long. 51. 20. to 58. FULDA, a biſhopric and principality of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine; bounded on the north by Heſſe Caſſel, on the eaſt by the county of Henneberg, on the ſouth by the biſhopric of Wurtzburg, and on the weſt by the principality of Iſenburg and Heſſe; about 40 miles in length, and from 7 to 25 in breadth. The country is mountainous and woody, with ſome rich arable lands, and ſome ſalt and medicinal ſprings. The aſſeſſment in the matricula of the empire is 250 florins monthly, and the tax for each chamber term 243 rixdollars four kruitzers. The biſhopric owes its riſe to a cloiſter of Benedictine monks, erected in 744, which was raiſed to a biſhopric, in the year 1752, by pope Benedict XIV.

FULDA, a town of Germany, and capital of the biſhopric of the ſame name, ſituated on the river Fulda, in the circle of the Upper Rhine. It was only a village before the year 1162, when it was made a town. The biſhop reſides here in a handſome palace. Beſides the cathedral, it has a collegiate church, an univerſity, founded in the year 1734, a college, an academy, and a convent of Benedictines. It is ſituated nearly in the centre of the dioceſe. The chapter is compoſed of thirteen cantons. The library contains a number of ancient and rare manuſcripts. Fulda was taken by the hereditary prince of Brunſwick, and prince Charles of Bevern, in the year 1759, with little loſs on their ſide: the duke of Wurtemberg was preparing a grand entertainment and ball on the very day, but decamped precipitately. The loſs of the enemy was very conſiderable, four battalions being killed, or much wounded, and near 1000 made priſoners: 63 miles ENE. Mentz, and 43 E. Wetzlar. Long. 27. 21. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 22. N.

FUNCHAL, or Funchial, a ſea-port town and capital of the iſland of Madeira, ſituated in a valley on the ſouth coaſt of the iſland: ſaid to be ſo called from the quantity of fennel (funcha in Portugueſe) which grew on the ſpot. The harbour is defended by ſeveral batteries, and a caſtle. It contains ſix pariſhes, ſeveral chapels, and ſix convents, with ſeveral hoſpitals. When Funchal was fortified, it would ſeem the engineer had nothing in view beſides rendering it ſtrong on the ſea ſide; for there all the works, except a ſingle wall, are directed. This was certainly a great overſight, as there are ſeveral bays not far diſtant from the land ſide, where an enemy might ſafely diſembark, and march to the very walls without oppoſition. The Portugueſe, though numerous, do not conſtitute the bulk of the inhabitants, the Engliſh and French Roman Catholics, who live in the Portugueſe manner, are juſtly ſuppoſed to exceed the others in number and wealth; beſides theſe, there is an infinity of Mulatto and Negro freemen. The ſtreets of Funchal are drawn by a line, all the houſes neat, and the windows ſaſhed with lath-work, but with openings wide enough for thoſe within to ſee and be ſeen. The principal trade of the inhabitants conſiſts in wine and ſweetmeats. Long. 16. 49. W. Greenwich. Lat. 32. 32. N.

It is a fertile and a pleaſant iſland: moſt of the Daniſh nobility have ſeats here. The ſoil yields great crops of corn, ſo that near 100,000 barrels are annually exported to Norway and Sweden, excluſive of the conſumption at home. The inhabitants keep a great number of bees, and with the honey produced make mead, which forms a conſiderable article of trade, being ſent to every part of the kingdom. Here are ſeveral lakes and rivers, abounding in fiſh, but none navigable; great quantities of cod, herrings, turbots, and other fiſh, are caught in the bays along the coaſt. Odenſee is the capital. Long. 9. 40. to 10. 50. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. [illegible]. to 55. 42. N.

GALICIA, a province of Spain, bounded on the north and weſt by the ſea, on the eaſt by Aſturia and Leon, and on the ſouth by Portugal, from which it is ſeparated by the river Minho. The ſoil in general is unequal and mountainous, with ſome ſmall plains on the ſea coaſt. There are ſome excellent ports, nevertheleſs it has but little commerce. Induſtry is not excited, and the Galician is rather laborious than active. The air in general is moiſt ; temperate on the coaſts ; colder inland. The inhabitants ſow but little wheat, plant many vineyards and fruit trees, and cultivate rye and flax. The ſea coaſts abound with fiſh, particularly ſardines, anchovies, ſalmon, and a peculiar ſpecies which the fiſhermen call bezuges. The foreſts ſupply good ſhip timber. In the mountains are found mines of gold, copper, iron, lead, and vermillion. It has likewiſe ſome excellent paſtures. It contains 64 cities and towns, but few conſiderable ones, 3242 pariſhes, 242,264 families, 12,637 religious, 11 cathedrals, 34 hoſpitals, 14 colleges, 79 convents of men, and 24 of women. The inhabitants are conſtant and courageous : poverty compels great numbers of them to ſeek a living in the neighbouring provinces, where they hire themſelves to the moſt ſervile and laborious employments, for which they are deſpiſed by the other Spaniards. Galicia was anciently a kingdom, under the Suevi, the Viſigoths, and Moors. In the year 1037, it was united to the kingdom of Caſtile. The principal towns are Corunna, and Compoſtella, or St. Jaques de Compoſtella. The principal rivers are the Ulla, Tambra, Mandeo, and Lours.

GALWAY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, next to Cork the moſt conſiderable in point of ſize in the kingdom, but the leaſt populous ; bounded on the north by Mayo and Roſcommon ; on the eaſt by Roſcommon, King's County, and Tipperary ; on the ſouth by the county of Clare, and an arm of the ſea, called Galway Bay, and on the weſt by the Atlantic Ocean ; about 76 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 40 from north to ſouth, containing 116 pariſhes, and 28 churches. The number of houſes is 28,212, and about 142,000 ſouls. The ſoil is warm and fertile, with a lime-ſtone bottom. This lime-ſtone riſes ſometimes ſo near the ſurface as to render it unfit for tillage, but yielding excellent paſture. Some parts are mountainous, with quarries of black and white marble. Great quantities of kelp are made along the coaſt, and ſea-weed gathered for manure, of great advantage to the families that dwell there, who are little farmers, and hardy fiſhermen. On the ſea coaſt is a large bay, ſheltered by the three ſouthern iſlands of Arran. The ſound between theſe iſlands is a ſafe road, and a number of creeks, as well as the harbour of Galway, are deep enough to admit merchant ſhips, but are more frequented by coaſters and fiſhing boats than by veſſels in the foreign trade. There are ſeveral other well ſheltered harbours on the coaſt of Galway. The principal towns are Galway, Tuam, Ballinaſloe, and Loughrea. This county ſends two repreſentatives to the Iriſh parliament.

GALWAY, a town of Ireland, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on a river, which runs from Lough Corrib into the ſea. It is ſurrounded with ancient walls, which are haſtening to decay. The houſes are generally well built, in number 950, and containing about 12,000 inhabitants. It was formerly the moſt commercial town in Ireland, and has now a conſiderable trade. The port is very commodious and ſafe, but ſo diſtant from the city that lighters are neceſſary to carry goods into the town. Galway is governed by a mayor, recorder, and ſheriffs ; it is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament. In the year 1641, it refuſed to admit either Engliſh or Iriſh, till the rebels became maſters of the adjoining country, when they were joined by the citizens. At the cloſe of the rebellion it ſubmitted to the duke of Ormond, but, in 1651, it ſurrendered to major-general Ireton. In the year 1690, it declared for king James, but next year ſurrendered to general Ginkle : 96 miles W. Dublin. Long. 8. 58. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 15. N.

GANGES, a town of France, in the department of the Herault, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Montpellier: 7 leagues N. Montpellier, and 6½ NE. Lodeve.

GANGES, a river of Aſia, which riſes by two branches from the mountains of Kentaiſſe, in the country of Thibet, theſe two branches take a weſterly direction, inclining to the north, for a courſe of about 300 miles in direct diſtance, when meeting the great chain or ridge of mount Himmaleh, which extends from Cabul along the north of Hindooſtan, and thro' Thibet, the rivers are compelled to turn to the ſouth, in which courſe they unite their waters, and form what is properly termed the river Ganges. This body of water now forces a paſſage through the ridge of mount Himmaleh, at the diſtance, poſſibly, of 100 miles below the place of its firſt approach to it, and ſapping its foundation, ruſhes through a cavern, and precipitates itſelf into a vaſt baſon, which it has worn in the rock, at the hither foot of the mountains. From this ſecond ſource (as it may be termed) of the Ganges, its courſe becomes more eaſtwardly than before through the rugged country of Sirinagur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally eſcapes from the mountainous tract, in which it has wandered for about 800 Britiſh miles. At Hurdwar, it opens itſelf a paſſage through mount Sewallick; which is the chain of mountains that borders on the level country, on the north of the province of Delhi. After entering Hindooſtan, it paſſes by Anopſheer, Furruckabad, Canoga, Cawnpour, Allahabad, where it is joined by the Jumna, Merzapour, Chunar, Benares, Patna, 36 miles above which it is joined by the Dewah, and 16 miles above the ſame town by the Soane, and oppoſite to it by the Gunduck. After leaving Patna, it paſſes by Bar, Monghir, 40 miles eaſt of which it is joined by the Coſa, it then paſſes by Rajemal, 40 miles below which it is joined by a branch of the Sanpoo, or Teeſta, and 80 miles below that by another branch of the ſame river. Soon after which it divides into a multitude of branches, called the Mouths of the Ganges, which empty themſelves into the Bay of Bengal, in Lat. 21. 40. to 22. N. A circumſtance attending the courſe of the Ganges and the Burranpooter rivers in reſpect to each other is remarkably ſingular. Iſſuing from oppoſite ſides of the ſame ridge of mountains, they direct their courſe towards oppoſite quarters, till they are more than 1200 miles aſunder, and afterwards meet in one point near the ſea, after each has performed a winding courſe of more than 2000 miles.

Géneteil, a town of France, in the department of the Mayne and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Baugé: 2¼ leagues N. Baugé, and 1¼ SW. le Lude.

GENEVA, a city and republic, in alliance with the Swiſs, ſituated on the confines of Savoy, France, and Swiſſerland, at the ſouthern extremity of the lake, called the Lake of Geneva, or the Leman Lake: the Rhône paſſing through it, and dividing it into two unequal parts. Julius Cæſar made it a place of arms. It flouriſhed under the ſucceſſors of Cæſar: the inhabitants became Chriſtians in the third century, and, at leaſt as early as the middle of the fourth, it was the ſee of a biſhop. The invaſions of the people from the north, the diſorders, ravages, and revolutions which followed, were not leſs ſenſibly felt at Geneva, than in other parts of the weſtern empire. This town and neighbouring country fell to the Burgundians, afterwards to the Franks. Charlemagne, when he aſſembled his army at Geneva to march againſt the Lombards, augmented the privileges of the citizens, and granted them free fairs. In the diſmemberment of the vaſt eſtates of Charlemagne, Geneva came ſucceſſively annexed to the kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. In the year 1032, it was united to the empire; but the authority of the emperors, not well eſtabliſhed in Germany, was hardly at all regarded in the diſtant provinces; the great vaſſals were become independent. Neceſſity had taught the towns to provide for their defence, by uniting and forming a government within themſelves; and the chiefs of the empire, too feeble to maintain their proper authority, protected the aſſociations of the common people, and augmented their liberties, as a balance to the tyranny of the lords and the clergy. In the midſt of this confuſion, which frequent revolutions and profound ignorance had prolonged for ſeveral centuries, the clergy, under one chief, whom devotion had rendered powerful, had began to join a great portion of temporal juriſdiction to their ſpiritual juriſdiction, already too extenſive. Thus, the biſhops of Geneva, like the biſhops of Lauſanne and Sion, had obtained of the emperors the title of princes and ſovereigns over the town, and a conſiderable ſurrounding country. On the other hand, the counts of the Genevois, that is to ſay, the country in the neighbourhood of Geneva, originally only officers of the emperors, though become vaſſals of the biſhop, aſpired to an excluſive adminiſtration of juſtice both in the town and country. The bulls of the emperors and the popes ſerved rather to keep up theſe diſputes than to decide them. The people, preſſed alternately by theſe two powers, profited by their diſputes to confirm and extend their privileges. They were leſs afraid of the authority of the biſhop, who had a greater intereſt at ſtake. Nevertheleſs, a third power was formed in the neighbourhood, which menaced the liberty of the city. The counts of Savoy became powerful by the ſucceſſive poſſeſſions of ſeveral provinces, and among the reſt the Genevois adopted the pretenſions of the ancient counts, and aſpired to the ſovereignty of a town at once a frontier and flouriſhing. Several attempts were made by different princes, but nothing very alarming till, in the beginning of the 16th century, Charles III. a fiery and enterpriſing prince, by conſent of the biſhops, frequently came into the town with a great deal of parade, to gain ſome and intimidate others; and to make a ſhow of his authority, put to death ſome citizens who dared to reſiſt his tyrannic will. A citizen of Geneva, named Berthelier, who had obtained the freedom of Friburg, in Swiſſerland, inſinuated to the chiefs of that republic the benefit of an alliance with Geneva, and that it would be to their intereſt to prevent the latter town from falling into the power of an ambitious neighbour. A treaty was concluded, and two parties aroſe in Geneva, one which remained attached to the intereſt of the duke, and the other on the ſide of liberty. The former were called Mammelukes, from the troops of Egypt who were ſo called. The others received the ſirname of Huguenots, which was afterwards given to all the Proteſtants of France. This latter term is, without doubt, a corruption of the German word eidgnoſs, which ſignifies bound or confederate by oath. The duke Charles, irritated at this tranſaction, entered Geneva with a body of troops, by a breach in the wall, and compelled the people to renounce their new alliance, and, by ſolicitations among the Swiſs Cantons, perſuaded Friburg to deſiſt from the treaty, promiſing not to injure the liberties of Geneva. Nevertheleſs, Berthelier was ſacrificed to his vengeance, and the biſhop, ſurrounded by a numerous guard, entered into the council general, and depoſed the magiſtrates. Fortunately for Geneva, they quitted the town ſoon after theſe ſudden acts of violence, and gave the citizens time to recover from their terror and conſternation. A new alliance was entered into between the towns of Berne, Friburg, and Geneva, in the year 1526, which the duke of Savoy was not able to prevent, and occaſioned long wars between the republic and Savoy. The biſhop, in his turn, being embroiled with the duke, was reduced to demand the right of the citizenſhip of Geneva, to enjoy the protection of the new alliance, which he confirmed. At this time the doctrine of the reformation began to be received by the people, fired by the enthuſiaſm of liberty, which invited them to throw off the yoke both eccleſiaſtical and political. The biſhop, whoſe actions had almoſt always been weak or deceitful, was become deſpicable in the eyes of the people and the duke. His imprudent menaces and precipitate retreat, ſerved to ſtrengthen the cauſe of the reformers. Of their two allies, one exhorted the Genevois not to ſeparate from the communion of the church of Rome. The other preſſed them to confirm their liberty by ſhaking off the eccleſiaſtical dominion. In the year 1535, in full council, the doctrines of the reformation were adopted; in conſequence of which the canton of Friburg renounced the alliance. The celebrated John Calvin arriving accidentally at Geneva, towards the cloſe of the following year, was induced to remain and complete the work that was begun. Geneva was now regarded as the centre and aſylum of the reformed religion, both by the French and Italians, and by the retreat of the perſecuted Proteſtants, the arts and commerce became daily more flouriſhing, and population increaſed. In the year 1559, an academy was founded, under the direction of Theodore Beza. In the year 1536, the cantons of Bern and Friburg, and the Valais, ſeized on ſome of the provinces belonging to the duke of Savoy, near the Lake of Geneva, which procured ſome reſpite of hoſtilities to the new republic. In the year 1584, a perpetual alliance was entered into between Bern, Zurich, and Geneva, which continues to this day, and forms the bond of union between Geneva and Swiſſerland. In the year 1602, an attempt was made by Charles, duke of Savoy, to ſeize on the city by ſurpriſe. Some troops approached the ramparts of Geneva in the night, and a number of ſoldiers had already ſcaled a baſtion, and penetrated into the town. By a fortunate accident the citizens were alarmed time enough to repulſe the enemy, and drive them from their walls. The memory of this deliverance was long preſerved by an anniverſary fête. A war commenced in conſequence of this perfidy, but was followed by a ſolemn peace the following year, ſigned at St. Julien, the 21ſt July, 1603. Since that time the hiſtory of Geneva has been chiefly diſputes between the ariſtocratic and democratic parties. In the year 1782, the diſſenſions aroſe to ſuch a height, and the popular party had gained ſo great aſcendency, that the kings of France and Sardinia, and the canton of Bern, interfered, and threatened to beſiege the city. They had impriſoned ſome of the magiſtrates who had been moſt violent in their oppoſition of their popular claims. The peaſants of the territory joined the Geneveſe, and offered to ſerve in their cauſe without pay, to mount guard, and work at the fortifications. M. de Jaucourt, commander of the French troops, ſaid, that unleſs he was peaceably admitted, he muſt enter the town by force: among other conditions, he inſiſted, that no perſon ſhould appear in the ſtreets, that all arms ſhould be delivered up, that the magiſtrates ſhould be reinſtated, and that the chiefs of the repreſentants, as the popular party were called, ſhould be baniſhed from Geneva. In this the French general was joined by the two others. Reſiſtance muſt have been in vain, the beſiegers could have been ſupported continually by freſh troops, and the deſtruction of the city muſt inevitably have been the conſequence. The repreſentants reſtored the confined magiſtrates to liberty, and left the city in a body. The Sardinians, who firſt entered the gates at five in the morning, found the place deſerted. However, except the principal leaders, moſt of the popular party have returned. If the ariſtocratic party obtained too much ſway in 1782, another revolution, in 1789, advanced the rights of the people, and, perhaps, a conſtitution was then formed, properly and judiciouſly modelled between the two extremes: 72¼ poſts SE. from Paris, by Bourg-en-Breſſe and Maçon; and 58 by Dijon and Mount Jura. Long. 5. 55. W. Greenwich. Lat. 46. 11. N.

GENEVA (Lake of), a large lake between Swiſſerland and Savoy, in a vally, which ſeparates the Alps from Mount Jura. The length along the coaſt of Swiſſerland is 18¾ leagues (25 to a degree) on the ſide of Savoy 15 leagues: the greateſt breadth 3¼ leagues. The water is clear, except where the entrance of the Rhone make it foul by the quantity of mud it brings with it in its courſe: near Geneva it is ſhallow, but in ſome parts exceedingly deep, by ſome ſaid to be unfathomable: it abounds in fiſh remarkable as well for their excellence as ſize.

GENEVA, or New-Geneva, a village in Ireland, county of Waterford, province of Munſter; it was elegantly built, and was the reception of expatriated citizens of Geneva; but they having relinquiſhed the deſign of ſettling in Ireland, this place remains ſtill uninhabited.

GENEVEIVE, a town of North America, on the weſt ſide of the Miſſiſippi. Long. 90. 44. W. Greenwich. Lat. 37. 35. N.

GENEVILLIERS, a town of France, in the department of Paris: three quarters of a league W. S. Denis.

GENEVOIS, or Duchy of Geneva, a province of Savoy; bounded on the north by the Swiſs territories, on the eaſt by Faucigny, on the ſouth by Savoy Proper, and on the weſt by France, from which it is ſeparated by the Rhône: Geneva and its territory formerly made a part of it. Annecy is now the capital.

GENEURO, a mountain which divided Piedmont from the ancient Dauphiny, in the road from Briançon to Suſa.

GENGENBACH, an Imperial town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, ſituated on the Kinzig, in the Ortenau: it pays 24 florins for a Roman month, and to the chamber of Wetzlar 22 rixdollars 88 kruitzers: in this town is an abby, whoſe prelate is a prince of the empire, and in the matricula is aſſeſſed at ſeven florins: and to the chamber of Wetzlar pays 40 rixdollars 54 kruitzers: 22 miles N. Friburg, and 15 SE. Straſburg. Long 25. 41. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 24. N.

Genillé, a town of France, in the department of the Indre and Loire: 1 league N. Loches.

GENITE, a town of France, in the department of the Correze: 18 miles W. Brive.

GENLIS, a town of France, in the department of the Aiſne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Chauny: 3 miles N. Chauny, and 12 S. St. Quentin.

GENNE, a town of France, in the department of the Mayne and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Saumur, near the Loire: 3 leagues NW. Saumur.

GENNEP, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Cleves, ſituated on the Niers, near the Meuſe. It contains a church for Roman Catholics, and another for Proteſtants: 9 miles SSW. Cleves. Long. 23. 28. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 43. N.

GENNEPER-HUYS, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Cleves: 9 miles SSW. Cleves.

GENNES, a town of France, in the department of the Ille and Vilaine, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of La Guerche: 5 miles NE. La Guerche.

GENOA, a republican ſtate of Italy; bounded on the north by Piedmont, the Milaneſe, and the Parmeſan, on the eaſt by the ſtates of the duke of Tuſcany, on the ſouth by the Mediterranean Sea, and on the weſt by the county of Nice; about 120 miles in length, but ſcarcely in any part more than 20 in breadth. The country is mountainous, and part of it covered with barren rocks, which ſerve for its defence. Some of the mountains are covered with wood, and ſome yield good paſture. There is but a ſmall quantity of arable land, ſo that the inhabitants are obliged to purchaſe great part of their corn from Naples, Sicily, and other places; however, they carefully cultivate every place they can, and throughout the year they are ſupplied with excellent legumes and vegetables for the table. They make a conſiderable quantity of wine, and have abundance of excellent fruit, eſpecially citrons, oranges, pomegranates, almonds, and figs. A great number of mulberry trees are raiſed to feed ſilk-worms, and olives grow in great plenty, eſpecially round the Gulf of Spezzia. Salt is produced ſufficient for exportation. Here and there are found quarries of marble and other ſtone. A great number of ſmall rivers run from the mountains, but none worthy of any other name than brooks. The inhabitants are Roman Catholics, and ſubmit to the tribunal of inquiſition. The Proteſtants, who dwell in the towns, are not beloved, but are ſuffered by the magiſtrates to live in peace. The ſenate names to the vacant biſhoprics, a prerogative which was a long time enjoyed by the popes. The manufactures are not ſo flouriſhing as they formerly were; the moſt conſiderable are velvet, pluſh, damaſk, different kinds of ſilk, for which they purchaſe a great deal of raw ſilk from Meſſina and other places; gold and ſilver ſtuffs, lace, gloves, ſtockings, ribbons, ſoap, paper to imitate the Indian, &c. Other articles of commerce are oil, fruit, macaroni, confectionary, Parmeſan cheeſe, anchovies, &c. The manufactures of the Genoeſe are greatly reduced: too great a price being paid for the articles which they manufacture, and the inſecurity of their ports contribute greatly to enfeeble their commerce. Genoa has been declared a free port; but Leghorn is likewiſe a free port, and with ſtill greater liberty. The banking buſineſs in Genoa is very conſiderable, and the bankers are eſteemed the richeſt in Europe. The city of Genoa was formerly the capital of Liguria. It was deſtroyed by the Carthaginians, and rebuilt by the Romans, whoſe ally it become, and whoſe fortune it followed. It fell under the power of the Oſtrogoths, from whom it was taken by Beliſarius. In the year 670, it was ſacked by the Lombards, under whoſe power it remained till they were expelled from Italy by Charlemagne. It was for ſome time under the German empire, but by degrees erected itſelf into an independent ſtate. Its power ſoon after ſo encreaſed by its flouriſhing trade, that, in the year 806, it reduced the iſland of Corſica, and, in the 11th and 12th centuries, diſtinguiſhed itſelf in the cruſades. The Genoeſe, in the 12th century, ſubjected the half of Sardinia and the city of Syracuſe, with its dependencies, to their dominion, and even made themſelves maſters of the Black Sea and all its ports, and ſettled themſelves in the Crimea. In the 13th century, they added to their conqueſts the towns of Albengo, Savona, Vintimiglia, and others in their neighbourhood; and for the ſuperiority of the ſea, engaged in a long and troubleſome war with Venice, which laſted till the year 1381. By it they were extremely weakened, and rendered unable to maintain their poſſeſſion of the Crimea, from which they were entirely driven in 1471. In the laſt century, their republic and liberty ſuffered many rude ſhocks, and the inteſtine diſſenſions about the form of government ſo debilitated the ſtate, that they were obliged to put themſelves ſometimes under the protection of the dukes of Milan, and ſometimes under the kings of France: but the latter treating them with intolerable haughtineſs and rigour, they ſtruggled hard, but unſucceſsfully, for liberty, till that naval hero, Andrew Doria, in 1528, reſcued his country out of the hands of their tyrannical maſters, ſettled it in perfect freedom, and eſtabliſhed its preſent conſtitution. Ever ſince Genoa has generally ſided with Spain, which frequenely involved it in quarrels with France: and it alſo had a dangerous neighbour in the dukes of Savoy. In 1684, it was cruelly bombarded by the French, and to ſave itſelf from total deſtruction, was obliged to ſubmit to very hard terms; two of which were, that the doge and four counſellors ſhould appear in perſon at Verſailles, and aſk pardon; and that the ſtate ſhould diſarm all their gallies to ſix, with a promiſe not to fit out more without the knowledge and conſent of the king. In the year 1713, Charles VI. ſold the marquiſate of Finale to the republic for a conſiderable ſum of money. In 1743, the queen of Hungary having, at the treaty of Worms, ceded to the king of Sardinia all her rights to the town and marquiſate of Finale, and demanding that the Genoeſe ſhould deliver up the marquiſate, they entered into an alliance with France, Spain, and Naples; and, in 1745, declared war againſt the king of Sardinia. The king of Sardinia made himſelf maſter of great part of the ſtate; ſeveral Genoeſe ports were bombarded by an Engliſh fleet; and the Imperialiſts even ſeized upon the city of Genoa; but after a terrible ſlaughter on both ſides, they were again driven out by the inhabitants; and, in 1747, miſcarried in their attempt to recover it. Its tranquillity was reſtored by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748. The ancient nobility conſiſt of 28 families, and are thoſe whom Andrew Doria, in 1528, ſeparated from all the reſt, and declared only capable of holding the chief offices and dignity of doge; all the other inhabitants of Genoa being reduced by him to the claſs of commoners. Since that time it has been found neceſſary to create other nobility. The nobility of Genoa are allowed to keep manufactures of velvet, ſilk, and cloth; to farm the duties, and to have ſhares in merchant veſſels; but all other buſineſs and handy-crafts are forbidden. The form of government in this republic is ariſtocratic. The chief is called doge, or duke, to which dignity no perſon is promoted till he is fifty years of age, and has for fifteen years left off all trade or occupation not conſiſtent with nobility. Every two years a new doge is choſen; and the former is incapacitated during five years to hold again the ſame poſt. However, he has a procurator's office aſſigned him, and a penſion of 500 ſcudi for life. In times of peace the republic uſually keep on foot a body of 5000 regular troops, namely, 4000 natives, 200 Germans, who are the doge's lifeguard, 500 Switzers, 300 Italians, and 100 Bombardiers. Beſides theſe, it has alſo a militia, which, in caſe of neceſſity, is obliged to take the field. The cavalry it raiſes in war time amounts only to about 600, who are but of little ſervice, by reaſon of the badneſs of the horſes in this country. The fleet of this republic, anciently ſo celebrated for its victories over the Saracens, Piſaneſe, Venetians, Spaniards, and Turks, and for continuing a conſiderable time maſters of Sardinia, Malta, Majorca, Minorca, Candia, Cyprus, and many other places in and near the Mediterranean and Archipelago, and even of the Black Sea, the Crimea, and other parts, is now reduced to ſix gallies. The city is about ten miles in circumference, and defended towards the land by a double wall. Several baſtions are erected along the ſea ſhore, on rocks which riſe above the water. The ſtreets are in general narrow, but clean and well paved; two, called the Strada Nuova and Strada Balbi, are filled with magnificent palaces, fronted with marble. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop. The cathedral is built in the Gothic ſtyle, and paved with black and white marble, in the treaſury of which is preſerved a curious hexagon diſh, ſaid to be of a ſingle emerald, found at Ceſarea in the time of the cruſades, which the Genoeſe received as their ſhare of the plunder. Beſides the cathedral, it contains thirty-two pariſh churches, many of which are magnificent, and adorned with ſculptures and pictures by the beſt maſters. The doge's palace is large, without decoration, except two ſtatues of John Andrew Doria and Andrew Doria, larger than the life, at the entrance. The arſenal contains arms for 34,000 men, machines, models for bridges, the armour worn by a number of Genoeſe women in the cruſades, a ſhield containing 120 piſtols, made by Julius Ceſar Vacche, for the purpoſe of aſſaſſinating the doge and ſenate at one time, &c. Other public buildings are the Albergo, which ſerves as a poor-houſe and houſe of correction, where is a beautiful relievo, the Virgin ſupporting a dead Chriſt, by Michael Angelo; and the aſſumption of the Virgin, in white marble, by Puget, an inimitable piece of ſculpture; a large hoſpital for the ſick of all nations and religions; the Conſervatory, for educating and portioning 300 poor girls; and a great number of palaces belonging to the nobility. They reckon at Genoa 69 convents of men and women. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 150,000: 63 miles S. Milan. Long. 26. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 25. N.—The conſtitution of this ſtate was changed in the beginning of the year 1797, from an ariſtocracy to a democracy.

GEORGIA, a country of Aſia, between the Caſpian and the Black Seas, but particularly applied to a country between the Caſpian Sea and Mingrelia, anciently known by the name of Iberia. The air is dry, very warm in ſummer, and very cold in winter. Fine weather commences in the month of May, and continues till the end of November. The ſoil is exceedingly fertile, provided the ground be watered. The bread and fruits are excellent, and the paſtures feed a great number of cattle, fat and lean. The game is of excellent flavour, and the wild hogs delicate. The inhabitants make wine, which they ſell into Armenia and Perſia, eſpecially to Iſpahan, for the king's table. Silk forms a conſiderable branch of trade to Erzerum; but the inhabitants are not acquainted with the beſt method of winding it. Georgia was in one kingdom, of which the inhabitants were Chriſtians, but ſince the year 1639, they have become a mixture of Mahometans; and the king of Perſia having conquered the country, has divided it between two native princes, by themſelves called kings, but by the ſophi ſtyled only governors, or viceroys. The moſt powerful of the two is that of Teflis, called in the language of the country, the king of Cartel. Each of theſe princes has generally a guard of Mahometan horſe in their pay. The king of Perſia obliges them to embrace the Mahometan religion, to preſerve the dignity in the family. The Chriſtians of the country in part follow the rites of the Armenians, and in part that of the Greek church, and are repreſented as the moſt tractable of all the Chriſtians of the Eaſt. Their money bears the name of the kings of Perſia, but juſtice is adminiſtered by Chriſtian magiſtrates. The Georgians have wonderful ſkill in the uſe of the bow, and have the reputation of being the beſt ſoldiers of any in Aſia. The women are celebrated for their beauty. As the country produces ſtrong wine, the Georgians are great drunkards, and are particularly fond of brandy, the women as well as the men. The manners and cuſtoms of the Georgians are a mixture of thoſe nations which are ſituated about them. The men have no virtue, but courage; fathers ſell their children, and ſometimes their wives; the women are without modeſty, and, although very handſome, love to paint. There are only four conſiderable towns, viz. Teflis, Gori, Suram, and Ali.

GEORGIA, one of the United States of America; bounded on the north by the Tennaſſee government, on the north-eaſt by South Carolina, on the eaſt by the Atlantic Ocean, on the ſouth by Eaſt Florida and Indian nations, and on the weſt by the Miſſiſippi; the dimenſions from eaſt to weſt, that is, from the Atlantic Ocean to the river Miſſiſippi, about 500 miles; from north to ſouth, meaſuring from Eaſt Florida, about 240 miles, and from the Indian nations to the Tennaſſee government 140. The firſt ſettlement by the Engliſh formed in this country was in the year 1733. A large voluntary ſubſcription, aſſiſted by a parliamentary grant of near 10,000l. was raiſed, and letters patent were obtained from king George II. for carrying the deſign of a ſettlement into execution, and the country was called Georgia, in honour of the ſovereign. The original intention was to provide for the diſtreſſed families of Great Britain and Ireland, and to convey them, without expence, to a country in which they might be enabled to obtain a better proviſion than they had before. Truſtees were appointed, and a ſyſtem of laws formed for the government of the new colony. General Oglethorpe was fixed on to direct the public finances, and carry the project into execution. He conducted the firſt coloniſts himſelf, which conſiſted of no more than 100 perſons, and arrived in the river Savannah in the year 1733. Before the expiration of the year, the number was increaſed to upwards of 600. The ſettlement was afterwards increaſed by emigrants from Scotland, Saltzburg, and from Swiſſerland. Several towns were built, and beſides thoſe who employed themſelves in agriculture, upwards of 600 people were employed in trading with the Indians for furs and ſkins in the year 1739. Yet, in the year 1741, the Engliſh government received information that ſcarce a ſixth part remained of the number ſent to Georgia, who being now totally diſcouraged, ſeemed only deſirous to fix in a more favourable ſituation. The reaſon of this calamity was founded in the ſyſtem of laws formed for the colony. The government, together with the property, had been ceded to individuals. The firſt uſe the proprietors of Georgia made of the unlimited power they were inveſted with, was to eſtabliſh a ſyſtem of legiſlation, that made them entirely maſters not only of the police, juſtice, and finances of the country, but even of the lives and eſtates of the inhabitants. Every ſpecies of right was withdrawn from the people, who are the original poſſeſſors of them all. Obedience was required of the people, though contrary to their intereſt and knowledge; and it was conſidered here, as in other countries, as their duty and their fate. As great inconveniencies had been found to ariſe in other colonies from large poſſeſſions, it was thought proper in Georgia to allow each family only fifty acres of land; which they were not permitted to mortgage, or even to diſpoſe of by will to their female iſſue. This laſt regulation, of making only the male capable of inheritance, was ſoon aboliſhed, but there ſtill remained too many obſtacles to excite a ſpirit of emulation. It ſeldom happens that a man reſolves to leave his country but upon the proſpect of ſome great advantage that works ſtrongly upon his imagination. All limits, therefore, preſcribed to his induſtry, are ſo many checks which prevent him from engaging in any project. The boundaries aſſigned to every plantation muſt neceſſarily have produced this effect. Several other errors ſtill affected the original plan of this country, and prevented its increaſe. No man was permitted to depart the province without a licence. If any of the lands, granted by the truſtees ſhall not be cultivated, cleared, and fenced round about with a wooden fence, or pales, ſix feet high, within eighteen years from the date of the grant, ſuch part was to revert to the truſt, and the grant with reſpect to it be void. All forfeitures for non-reſidence, high treaſon, felonies, &c. were to the truſtees for the uſe and benefit of the colony. The uſe of negroes was to be abſolutely prohibited, and alſo the importation of rum. None of the coloniſts were to be permitted to trade with the Indians, but ſuch as ſhould obtain a ſpecial licence for that purpoſe. Theſe were ſome of the fundamental regulations eſtabliſhed by the truſtees of Georgia, and perhaps the imagination of man could ſcarcely have framed a ſyſtem of rules worſe adapted to the circumſtances and ſituation of the poor ſettlers, and of more pernicious conſequences to the proſperity of the province. Yet, although the truſtees were greatly miſtaken with reſpect to their plan of ſettlement, it muſt be acknowledged their views were generous. As the people ſet out by them were poor and unfortunate, who were to be provided with neceſſaries at their public ſtore, they received their lands upon condition of cultivation, and by their perſonal reſidence of defence. Silk and wine being the chief articles intended to be raiſed, they judged negroes were not neceſſary to theſe purpoſes. The mother country at length perceived how much theſe defects in the political regulations and inſtitutions had prevented the increaſe of the colony, and freed them from the reſtraints they had before been clogged with. The government in Georgia was ſettled upon the ſame plan as that which had rendered Carolina ſo flouriſhing; and inſtead of being dependant on a few individuals, became one of the national poſſeſſions, under a governor. The face of the country is towards the ſea-coaſt, and fifty miles weſtward almoſt a continued level, the land then begins to riſe gradually, till at laſt it ends in the ſouthern extremity of the Allegany or Appalachian mountains. From the foot of theſe mountains extends a vaſt plain of the richeſt ſoil, capable of producing the chief Eaſt India plants. The ſoil is various, and its fertility different in different ſituations, and frequently in proportion to culture and improvement. The principal productions are rice, indigo, cotton, corn, and tobacco. From the time Georgia became a royal government, in 1752, till the peace of Paris, in the year 1763, ſhe ſtruggled under many difficulties, ariſing from the want of credit, from friends, and the frequent moleſtations of enemies. The good effects of the peace were ſenſibly felt in the province of Georgia. From this time it began to flouriſh under the fatherly care of governor Wright. To form a judgment of the rapid growth of the colony, we need only attend to its exports. In the year 1763, the exports of Georgia conſiſted of 7500 barrels of rice, 9633 pounds of indigo, 1250 buſhels of Indian corn, which, together with deer and beaver ſkins, naval ſtores, proviſions, timber, &c. amounted to no more than 27,021l. ſterling. Ten years afterwards, in 1773, it exported commodities to the value of 121,677l. ſterling. During the late war, Georgia was over-run by the Britiſh troops, and the inhabitants were obliged to flee into the neighbouring ſtates for ſafety. The ſuffering and loſſes of her citizens were as great in proportion to the number, and their wealth, as in any of the ſtates. Since the peace, the progreſs of the population of this ſtate has been aſtoniſhingly rapid. Its growth in improvement and population has been checked by the hoſtile irruptions of the Creek Indians, which have been frequent and very diſtreſſing to the frontier inhabitants. Georgia is divided into eleven counties, which contain in the whole about 85,000 ſouls, white and black. The principal towns are Auguſta, Savannah, Brunſwick, Sunbury, Frederica, Waſhington, Louiſville, &c. The principal rivers are the Savannah, Ogeechee, St. Mary, Alatamaha, &c. The animals and diſeaſes are ſimilar to thoſe of South Carolina.

GEORGIA, (New), or South Georgia, an iſland in the South Atlantic Ocean, about thirty leagues in length, and ten in breadth. It abounds in bays and harbours, but the prodigious quantity of ice on the coaſt renders it inacceſſible during a great part of the year, and even at other times the floating maſſes of ice render the anchorage dangerous. The appearance of the land is the ſame throughout, the lofty mountains towards the ſouth are divided into numberleſs parts, and appear like flames of fire. The coaſts are bounded with high perpendicular rocks of ice, large portions of which frequently break off and fall into the vallies or into the ſea, where they are toſſed about by the waves, and reſemble ſmall detached iſlands. The interior country is not leſs ſavage, the ſummits of the rocks are loſt in the clouds, and the vallies are covered with eternal ſnow; there is neither tree nor ſhrub. The only vegetables diſcovered were a kind of coarſe graſs, a ſpecies of burnet, and a plant like moſs. The rocks are compoſed of a kind of ſlate, of a blueiſh grey colour, diſpoſed in horizontal beds: many ſhining fragments of which cover the ſtrand, and appear to have no mineral in the compoſition. In all the coaſt there was found neither river nor freſh water ſpring. A great number of ſea-calves and ſea-bears were found, and flocks of penguins, ſome of which weighed thirty-eight pounds, and meaſured three feet three inches long. The only birds ſeen on the land appeared to be a ſpecies of the lark, no quadruped was found, but the dung of one was ſeen, ſuppoſed to have belonged to a fox, or animal of that kind. Long. 37. W. GERMANY, a country of Europe, in ancient times inhabited by various nations, who derived their origin from the Celtes and Sclavonians, or Vandals, differing in language and in manners. Germany, the name given to the whole country, is moſt generally ſuppoſed to be Roman, though the word by ſome is thought to be derived from a Teutonic word, which ſignifies warlike. The firſt Germans had neither towns nor villages, they conſidered houſes as their graves, and lived ſcattered round a wood or fountain. Their manners were pure. The women were reſpected, and the daughters educated by their mothers: when married, their huſbands became their maſters, and puniſhed them if they violated their faith. Some among them had neither laws nor modeſty; in their cabins were found cattle, children, father, mother, naked and mingled together. All were warriors, many of them ſailors. They had neither temples nor ſtatues; their gods were the ſtars, which gave light; the earth, which produced nouriſhment; fire; and heroes who had been celebrated for their courage, ſuch was Odin: after their death they hoped to appear in his preſence, to be honoured for their exploits, and to drink beer from the ſculls of their enemies. To Odin, as the god of war, they offered torn colours, broken javelins, ſpoils covered with blood, &c. which they placed in thick foreſts, that by their obſcurity impreſſed a kind of horror, and rendered their religion more formidable. Sometimes they ſacrificed human victims, when the women performed the barbarous execution, cloathed in white, and covered with a veil, with a girdle of gold, and feet naked: at which time they conſulted the gods, and augured events from the bloody entrails of the unfortunate victim. Some burned their captives to render the gods propitious. Chance held the place of wiſdom; in affairs public or private, they were for the moſt part directed by caſting lot, by the flight of birds, by the pace or neighing of their horſes. When they went to war they advanced ſinging rude ſongs, without harmony, and without variety; their women followed them, and excited them to combat. Their chiefs were among ſome elected, among others hereditary. Their buſineſs in war was rather to ſet an example by their actions than harangue them in fruitleſs words. Their office in peace was to appeaſe quarrels, to judge diſputes, to receive from the hands of their fathers young men who had attained a proper age of ſerving the ſtate to which they belonged: when they received a ſhield and a lance, which they never quitted except during ſleep. Their prieſts were the executors of juſtice. Their religion allowed them many wives, but the chiefs alone profited by this privilege; a widow rarely married again, ſhe finiſhed her days in retirement and ſorrow. Even queens ſuckled their children; the rank which they held by chance could not excuſe a duty impoſed by nature. They were ſtout, and feared neither hunger nor cold. They were ſober in general; but ſometimes drank to exceſs. They were ignorant of the art of making bread, yet they cultivated wheat, which they preſerved in caves: they reduced it to flour, and eat it boiled in paſte. They laboured in the field without inſuring the property: this was to avoid tyranny, and ſupport equality. They lived without diſeaſes and without care. The duel was amongſt them an act of religion; involuntary murder was redeemed with money. A ſimple turf formed their tomb, which contained with themſelves, their horſes and their arms. Theſe are the principal traits of the cuſtoms of theſe people. In the decline of the Roman empire, Germany was formed of ſeven principal nations, viz. the Franks, Swabians, Alemans, Friſians, Saxons, Thuringians, and Bavarians. The Franks, under the conduct of their king Clovis, reduced Gaul, and at laſt conquered the reſt of the German nations, ſo that under Charlemagne, all Germany was united to, and part of the French, or Frankiſh monarchy. In the year 800, Charlemagne took the title of emperor, entailing the dignity on his family. The conquered nations of Germany had before hereditary dukes of their own, and were governed by their own laws, but now the governors were appointed by the emperor. The ſtates, or diet of the empire, were ſtill held, and conſulted in paſſing laws by the prince. Germany became an independent kingdom in the year 843, in the perſon of Louis, grandſon of Charlemagne, whoſe dominions were bounded towards the weſt by the Rhine, with the three towns of Worms, Spire, and Mentz. Towards the latter end of his life he added a part of the kingdom of Lorraine, and in the year 879, his ſon obtained the remainder. Germany continued an hereditary kingdom till the year 911, when the race of Charlemagne became extinct; but the power of the kings was limited by the diets. The ſeveral territories were governed by counts without dukes: marggraves defended the borders againſt invaſions, and were therefore ſometimes called dukes, becauſe leaders of armies, but Louis, the grandſon of Charlemagne, created Ludolph duke of Saxony, which title devolved to his youngeſt ſon Otto. The German ſtates, on the death of Louis the Child, wiſhed to elect this Otto to be king; but, being old, he declined the honour, and on his recommendation they choſe Conrad, of Franconia. Conrad, on his death-bed, recommended Henry, the ſon of Otto, though his enemy, to ſucceed him. This generoſity was fortunate. About this time aroſe the duchies of Franconia, Swabia, and Bavaria. Henry, who was ſurnamed the Fowler, was a great man, he vanquiſhed the Huns, the Danes, the Vandals, and the Bohemians, and reduced order into the ſtate; he built walls round the cities, granted them privileges, and encouraged commerce; inſtituted a militia, from which he expelled all cowards and drunkards. He deſerves to be reckoned among the good kings: he is ranked amongſt the emperors, but he contented himſelf with the title of the king of Germany. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Otto, or Hatto, who took the title of emperor. The Saxon line of kings and emperors ended in the year 1224, when the ſtates elected Conrad II. ſirnamed Salicus. In the year 1273, after great troubles and diſputes, Rudolph, count of Habſburg, from whom the illuſtrious houſe of Auſtria is deſcended, was choſen emperor. The famous German bull, publiſhed by Charles IV. contains the fundamental inſtitutes of the empire. The empire is at preſent bounded on the north by the duchy of Sleſwick and the Baltic; on the eaſt by Pruſſia, Poland, Hungary, Sclavonia, and Croatia; on the ſouth by the Gulf of Venice, Italy, and Swiſſerland; and on the weſt by the Rhine, the United Provinces, and the German Ocean. All parts do not enjoy the ſame mildneſs of climate, nor the ſame fertility of ſoil, but in general the air is wholeſome, and the inhabitants live as long, or perhaps longer than in the neighbouring countries. Germany was formerly covered with wood, and even at this time contains ſome large foreſts, though ſeveral diſtricts are in want of wood, and burn turf, peat, and coals. The white mulberry-tree is very common, olives grow in ſeveral places, and cheſnuts, oaks, beech, firs, and fruit-trees, ſuch as apples, pears, cherries, plumbs, peaches, almonds, walnuts, filberts, &c. It yields all kinds of grain, ſuch as wheat, rye, maize, barley, oats, peas, beans, tares, &c. The inhabitants cultivate hemp, flax, hops, aniſe, cummin, tobacco, madder, woad, ſaffron, carthamus, or baſtard ſaffron, &c. Germany produces wine, which, in the opinion of many, ſurpaſſes the French and Hungarian wines. Of this the beſt ſort grows in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and conſtitutes the ſeveral ſpecies of Rheniſh wine (of which that of Rhingau is the beſt in all Germany) and the Moſel wine. The Franconian, Neckar, Kocher, and Muſcadel wines are alſo excellent. The number of horſes, oxen, cows, ſheep, goats, and ſwine, are incredibly great. The numerous rivers, brooks, lakes, and ponds in Germany, abound in various and fine ſorts of fiſh, ſuch as ſturgeon, ſhad, ſalmon, pike, carp, trout, lamprey, perch, roach, barbel, or red-beard, jack, eel, and many other ſpecies. Germany contains mines of gold, ſilver, lead, tin, iron, copper, loadſtone, ochre, cinnabar, quickſilver, coals, &c. with quarries of marble, alabaſter, and other ſtone; in many places are found agates, cornelians, and even the more valuable precious ſtones, as diamonds, rubies, emeralds, amethyſts, &c. with vitriol, ſaltpetre, alum, ſulphur, and ſalt ſprings in abundance. The number of medicinal ſprings and baths, both warm and cold, is very great. This country, which had anciently nothing but ſcattered huts thatched with ſtraw, now contains more than 2,300 towns, and about 80,000 villages. The number of inhabitants can hardly be much leſs than 30,000,000. Fortifications exiſted before towns; all the eminences were in conſequence adorned with caſtles; even convents were fortified, a melancholy proof of ſubaltern tyranny, and the weakneſs of government. There are different languages in Germany, which proves that their origins were diverſe; themſelve have ſpread over Europe, and almoſt all the kings of this part of the world are of German blood. The empire is compoſed of a great number of ſmall eſtates, ſome are free, others are not ſo: thoſe which ſubmitted to the ſovereigns included their vaſſals and villains. The territorial lords are called immediate members of the empire, their vaſſals are mediate members, the whole are divided into ten circles. This inſtitution was eſtabliſhed for the ſake of order and peace. Theſe circles have no determinate rank, but cuſtom has placed them in the following order, viz. Auſtria, Burgundy, Lower Rhine, Franconia, Bavaria, Swabia, Upper Rhine, Weſtphalia, Upper Saxony, and Lower Saxony. The two firſt are Catholics, the two laſt Proteſtants, the other ſix a mixture of both. Bohemia, Moravia, Luſatia, Sileſia, and ſome other countries are not compriſed in the ten circles. At its origin the empire was elective, the chief, though choſen from the ſame houſe, muſt ſolemnly renounce every act which may render the empire hereditary. Before Charles V. the title was that of Roman Emperor, and they were crowned at Rome. At preſent the emperor, before he is crowned, ſends to aſſure the pope of his filial reverence. The emperor is alſo king of Lombardy, and poſſeſſes a number of fiefs, as the duchies of Mantua, Milan, Montferrat, Gonzago, Mirandola, &c. beſides ſeveral in Tuſcany, Genoa, &c. which are compelled to furniſh contributions in time of war, but this they ſeldom do without compulſion. The emperor has no power in Italy without the conſent of the electors. Its revenues here conſiſt in long leaſes, fees, and forfeitures, eſpecially in the revenues of the duchy of Mantua, which he poſſeſſes as a fief forfeited to the empire. The ancient emperors travelled through their dominions, and rendered juſtice in perſon, having palaces in different provinces and in ſome towns, but have never had any poſitive places of reſidence appointed as imperial. They have generally choſen the capital of their hereditary eſtates. They had formerly great revenues ariſing from the provinces and convents. They had the tenth of all tolls, money, mines, ſalt-works, &c. Theſe revenues are now trifling. When the emperor dies, is a minor, or abſent, he has for his ſubſtitute the elector Palatine and the elector of Saxony, who are called Imperial Vicars. When they act, the decrees of the imperial chamber are iſſued in their name: they preſent to vacant benefices, receive the revenues, convoke the diet, and inveſt in their fiefs the vaſſals of the empire. The prerogatives of the emperor are to rank as the firſt princes of Europe, to be called the Advocate and Temporal Chief of Chriſtendom. His power in Germany is reſtrained by the laws, and by his oath. As the Advocate of Chriſtianity he protects the ſee of Rome, the pope, and the Chriſtian church. He confirms eccleſiaſtical benefices, ſends commiſſaries to the election of archbiſhops, biſhops, and prelates, but cannot aſſiſt in perſon. He has a right to preſent once during his reign a candidate to the firſt vacancy in every abby and chapter in the empire, Catholic or Proteſtant. He has a right to create nobles, raiſe countries to a more eminent rank, grant titles, dignities, employments, arms, and privileges. He confirms univerſities, grants to any place he pleaſes the privileges of holding fairs or markets, with the rights of a ſanctuary; can empower any perſon to adopt another as heir. He can reinſtate thoſe who have been adjudged to forfeit; ſuſpend the execution of judgment, legitimate baſtards, grant paſſports, abſolve from oaths. The poſts of the empire are inveſted in him, and the princes of Tour Taxis enjoy them as a fief of the empire. There are however particular poſts eſtabliſhed in different parts of the empire. In foreign wars he may act upon the defenſive. He permits powers to enrol themſelves in the empire; but for this it is neceſſary to obtain the conſent of the territorial lords. To make war, peace, alliances, alienations, engagements, to recover lands belonging to the empire, to convoke the diets, he muſt act with the electors; their conſent is neceſſary. The conſent of all the ſtates muſt be obtained when any of its members are put under the ban of the empire, or when any circumſtances occur in which the empire in general is concerned. This muſt be done in a diet convoked by the emperor, and the objects of their deliberation there announced. The emperor and the ſtates may attend in perſon, or ſend deputies in their ſtead, who may be charged with ſeveral votes. The ſtates of the empire are formed of three colleges, the college of electors, the college of princes, and the college of imperial towns. They deliberate ſeparately; the plurality of voices decides, except in caſe of religion, and affairs of general importance. If they agree, the reſult becomes the good pleaſure of the empire, and they preſent it to the chief; if the emperor approves, the reſolutions become laws. The right of voice and ſeat at the diet of the empire is attached to domain, and not to perſon. Theſe ſeats are eccleſiaſtical or ſecular, the former are either Catholics or Proteſtants. The Proteſtants are biſhops, abbeſſes, &c. they are elected by the chapter, and neither confirmed by the pope nor emperor; they take no oath, are not compelled to enter into orders; they acknowledge no metropolitan, and pay no firſt fruits; but muſt receive their inveſtiture from the emperor, within a year and a day after their election. Their dignity is equal to that of the Catholics; they have the ſame titles: in other reſpects they act as ſeculars, and are allowed to marry. The Catholic eccleſiſtics are archbiſhops, biſhops, abbots, abbeſſes, &c. As ſeculars they exerciſe the rights of a ſovereign in their own dominions. They are elected by their chapters, confirmed by the pope, or by the biſhop of the dioceſe. They ought, before they are conſecrated, to take an oath of fidelity to the pope, and make confeſſion of their faith. The ſecular ſtates are electors, princes, counts, barons, and imperial towns. This rank is obtained by ſucceſſion, by a grant of the emperor, by contract, or by alliance; it paſſes to the eldeſt ſons, never to daughters. The youngeſt ſons receive portions in land or money. They muſt eſpouſe an equal in rank, without which their children cannot inherit. The number of electors is nine, three of which are eccleſiaſtics, the archbiſhop of Mentz, Treves, and Cologn. The ſecular electors are the king of Bohemia, the electors of Bavaria, Saxony, Brandenburg, Palatine, and Brunſwick-Lunenburg, or Hanover. Next to the electors are the princes of the empire, who are partly eccleſiaſtical, and partly ſecular, of an ancient houſe, or a new creation. The eccleſiaſtical princes who have a voice and ſeat in the diet, are 33 in number. The ſecular princes are 61. The other princes have hitherto obtained no place in the council of the princes of the empire, but many have preſented themſelves for that purpoſe, and many alſo have the reſolutions either of all or of ſome particular colleges of the empire, and others the recommendation of the emperor in their favour. The cities of the empire are ſuch as are governed by magiſtrates of their own, ſtand immediately under the emperor and the empire, and have a ſeat and voice at the diet, at which they conſtitute the third and laſt college. Some of theſe are Catholics, others Lutheran, and others mixed. To the laſt of theſe belong all ſuch cities, a part of whoſe burghers, or rather council, enjoyed in 1624, both publih and private exerciſe of religion in their city. Within their territory they exerciſe ſupreme power. Some moreover have from ancient times bailiffs and head boroughs of the empire. Some ſtill pay the old taxes belonging to it; but the greater part are free from both. Excluſive of the ſtates of the empire, already deſcribed, there are alſo immediate members, but theſe are no ſtates of the empire. To this claſs belong ſeveral princes, counts, and lords, who partly poſſeſs immediate eſtates, and at diets, or in a college of the counts of the empire, have ſeats and voice; and partly, who, though they have no immediate eſtates, yet at diets, or in a college of counts, enjoy ſeat and voice. The free immediate knighthood of the empire, which conſiſts partly of families of counts, but principally of barons and nobles. Several cloiſters, colleges of canons and foundations. Several co-hereditary places; that is to ſay, certain families who hold a town, citadel, or village, &c. or even whole diſtricts in common; partly in order to protect each other againſt unjuſt violence, and partly on account of other ſtipulations with reſpect to ſucceſſion, &c. on which ſtipulations and the ancient cuſtoms, as alſo the form of government obſerved in ſuch a place, the whole conſtitution of a ſociety reſts. And certain immediate villages of the empire. The diet of the empire is an aſſembly of the emperor, and of all the ſtates, or of all their envoys and plenipotentiaries, in order to conſult about, and come to reſolutions in matters which concern the whole German empire. This diet is ſummoned by the emperor, who after conſultation with the electors, appoints the time and place for it, which latter muſt be within the German dominions. Should it once ceaſe, yet it muſt be renewed at leaſt once in ten years. The firſt diet of an emperor is to be held at Nuremberg. The preſent is held at Ratiſbon. The ſummons is performed by printed patents, ſubſcribed by the emperor himſelf, which are ſent in form of a letter, uſually ſix months before the beginning of the diet, to each ſtate of the empire in particular, and at the ſame time briefly declaring the occaſion of their meeting, and the moſt important matters to be tranſacted therein. The emperor either aſſiſts in perſon, or has a principal commiſſary, who to this day is always a prince, and for whoſe aſſiſtance a co-commiſſary is uſually appointed, who is generally an old imperial aulic counſellor, and a perſon of learning, and raiſed to the dignity of a noble or baron. The reſpective ſtates may either appear themſelves or by their envoys, or charge another ſtate or its envoys with their voices. On the ſide of the ſtates, the elector of Mentz, or his envoys, bears the general directory, and theſe envoys legitimate themſelves, or ſhow their credentials, to the principal commiſſary only, who makes it known to the empire by a decree of commiſſion; but all other envoys of the ſtate are legitimate themſelves, as well to the elector of Mentz, or his envoys, as to the imperial principal commiſſary. The judicatures of the empire are partly peculiar or lower, and partly general or higher. The ſupreme judicatures of the empire are as follow, viz. the imperial aulic council, which is held at the imperial court, and depends only on the emperor, who is ſupreme head and judge, to whom, in all matters of importance, a judgment is exhibited by the imperial aulic council. This judicature conſiſts of a preſident, the imperial aulic vice-chancellor, a vice-preſident (when the emperor is pleaſed to fill up that place) number of imperial aulic counſellors (ſix of whom muſt always be Lutherans, and of theſe one who ſits on the bench of lords, has uſually only 2600 florins ſalary; whereas a judge who ſits on the bench of the learned has 4000, together with other advantages and immunities) two ſecretaries, and a fiſcal of the empire. To this claſs alſo belong the agents of the imperial aulic council, who give in the writings, urge the reſolutions, &c. The preſent regulation of the imperial aulic council was preſcribed in the year 1654, by the emperor Ferdinand III. The imperial, and chamber of the empire, is filled by the emperor and ſtates of the empire at the ſame time, but maintained only by the latter. It is held at preſent in the imperial city of Wetzlar. This judicature conſiſts of a chamber-judge, two preſidents of the chamber-judicature (one of whom is a Roman Catholic, and the other Lutheran) as alſo of a number of aſſeſſors of the chamber judicature of the empire, of whom there are now only ſeventeen, viz. nine Catholic, and eight Lutheran; but by the peace of Weſtphalia they ought to be fifty. To it alſo belong a general and advocate fiſcal, together with thirty procurators, and a number of advocates. The chamber judicature has alſo a chancery of its own, and a treaſurer, who has the direction of the chamber-terms of payment. The ordinance of chamber judicature was firſt made in 1495, and frequently afterwards, but particularly in the year 1555, was altered and improved; and in the following times again variouſly explained, improved, and altered. The taxes and impoſts of the empire can only be laid on with the advice, privity, and conſent of the electors, princes, and ſtates, at general diets. Theſe taxes, &c. are partly ordinary, and partly extraordinary. The former are what are ſtyled the chamber-terms, or the money which each ſtate of the empire is to contribute annually, for the maintaining of the chamber-judicature of the emperor and empire. The extraordinary taxes here are ſuch as are frequently granted by the ſtates, in caſes of neceſſity, at the deſire of the emperor; for inſtance, for the ſupport of the emperor, or of the army of the empire; or the forts thereof, ſuch as Philipſburg, and Kehl, as alſo of Mentz, or for the war againſt the Turks, the expences of an embaſſy of the empire, the building or maintaining of the forts againſt the Turks, the erection of a houſe for the chamber-judicature, for the preſent intended commanding general of the empire, &c. The granting of theſe happens in Germany according to what is called Roman months, which denomination deduces its origin from thoſe times in which the emperors, in order to receive the papal coronation, took a journey to Rome, and the German ſtates of the empire were bound to conduct them with a certain number of men, conſiſting of horſe and foot, for ſix months, at their own expence; or to pay twelve florins monthly for a horſeman, and for a footman four, which money obtained the name of Roman months. This foot or ſtandard was afterwards retained, and the rate of each ſtate, either in men or money, ſettled in what is called the matricula of the empire. But though certain Roman months were frequently granted the emperor, yet they were not however duly paid. A Roman month ought to bring in 58,280 florins. The principal rivers of Germany are the Danube, Rhine, Maine, Elbe, Oder, and Weſer.

GERTRUDENBUR , or St. Gertruydenburg, a town of Brabant, but of late years ſubject to Holland; ſuch was the diſpoſition of both countries towards this place, that the Brabanters were accuſtomed to compel their dukes to promiſe their endeavours to reunite it to their duchy, and the Hollanders, on the contrary, compelled their comte to ſwear not to neglect any means in his power to preſerve it. It has a good harbour formed by the Merwe, which is here extended to a very conſiderable lake, called Bies Boſch, of about two hours paſſage acroſs to Dort. It is built in the form of a creſcent, with regular fortifications, good baſtions, and ſome forts with ſluices, by means of which they can lay the country under water. In ancient charters it is called Mons Littoris, the Mountain of the Shore. Pepin de Landen, duke of Brabant, gave it to his daughter Gertrude, in 647, who built a church dedicated to St Amand, biſhop of Tongres; but afterwards the place becoming celebrated by the death and miracles of Ste. Gertrude, it has ſince been called Mont de Ste. Gertrude, or Gertrudenburg. It has a caſtle built in 1321. In the year 1420, the inhabitants of Dort took the town and ſet fire to it, which demoliſhed the church. On the 28th of Auguſt, 1573, the confederates, under the conduct of captain Poyet, a French Calviniſt, came ſo ſuddenly on it, that they almoſt cut the garriſon in pieces before they could act on the defenſive. In 1589, the Engliſh garriſon ſurrendered, or as ſome aſſert, ſold it to the prince of Parma. Prince Maurice came to beſiege it the 28th of March, 1593, and after having taken the fort of Stekelholt, which was about two muſquet ſhots from the town, he approached near, made bridges over the waters and marſhes for a regular communication between his quarters, and fortified his camp with ſuch art and caution that it could not be forced, and the place was compelled to ſurrender on the 25th of June, in the ſight of comte de Manſfelt, who had advanced to its relief, and was then beſieging the prince's army. Gertrudenburg was ſummoned by the French the latter end of February, 1793, and ſurrendered after three days bombardment; it was evacuated ſoon after. The officers who ſurrendered the fort were afterwards tried on a ſuſpicion of miſconduct, but were acquitted with honour. It was taken again by the French in the year 1795: 10 miles SE. Dort, and 7 NE. Breda. Long. 22. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 42. N.

GHENT, a city and capital of Flanders, ſituated on the conflux of the rivers Scheldt, Lis, Moeze, and Lieve, which with a great number of canals, cut through it every way, divide the town into 26 ſmall iſlands. The Nervii choſe it for their city, and after them the Vandals, who gave it the name of Wanda, from whence the name of Gand, or Ghent, is probably derived. Odoacer, grand Foreſter of Flanders, ſurrounded it with walls; ſince, which it has been frequently enlarged, particularly in the year 1397, under Philip the Bold, 25th comte of Flanders. The inhabitants were always warlike, and they have had frequent wars both againſt their neighbours and alſo againſt their princes. It is related in the annals of the province, that, in the year 1381, 60,000 Flemings under the conduct of Philip d'Artevelle, revolted againſt Louis, comte of Flanders, their ſovereign. This prince demanded ſuccour of Charles VI. king of France, then a boy, who by the advice of the duke of Burgundy came to Courtray, in perſon at the head of his army, and attacked the rebels at Roſebeeck, near that city, and killed 40,000 of the Flemings, with Artevelle their leader. Artevelle was the ſon of a brewer, and was at firſt compelled by force to join the malcontents, but being once engaged he acted with great ſpirit, though with too much cruelty, he ordering no quarter to be given to the French, except to their little king Charles, whom he directed, if taken, to be brought to him, that being bred up at Ghent, he might learn to ſpeak good Flemiſh. This action was followed by the moſt outrageous act of ſeverity. The emperor, Charles V. was born in this town the 5th of February, 1500, but the inhabitants have little reaſon to reſpect his memory, for, loading them with frequent impoſitions, they revolted in 1539, and demanded ſuccour of Francis I. king of France, who paid no attention to their requeſts. The emperor departed from Spain, and paſſing through France, chaſtiſed them with extreme rigour; he put to death ſix and twenty of the principal citizens, baniſhed a great number, confiſcated their eſtates, took away their artillery, their arms, and their privileges, and condemned them to pay a fine of more than twelve hundred thouſand crowns; ordered the magiſtrates to walk in public proceſſion, with cords about their necks; and built a citadel to prevent them from again revolting; ſo that from one of the fineſt cities in Europe it became a perfect ſolitude: ſince that time it has loſt much of its ancient ſplendour, but it is even now conſiderable. In this city was concluded the famous treaty, on the 8th of November, 1676, called the Treaty of Ghent, conſiſting of five and twenty articles, the principal of which were, that the Spaniſh and foreign troops ſhould depart out of the country; that the provinces of Holland and Zealand ſhould remain united with the others; that the Catholic religion ſhould be maintained, and the ancient privileges of the country be ſecure; which treaty was approved and ratified by Philip II. king of Spain. A ſhort time after, the duke of Arſchot was appointed governor of Flanders, and made a magnificent entry into this city, but the citizens, inſtigated by Imbiſe, Reyhove, and ſome others, aſſembled three days after, and inſiſted on a reſtoration of thoſe privileges which had been taken from them by Charles V. and being refuſed, they ſeized the duke, the biſhops of Bruges and Ypres, and ſome other noblemen, and held them priſoners for ſome time. They went ſo far as to take an oath to the prince of Orange, ſubſcribed to the union of Utrecht, and Imbiſe was made the principal echevin of Ghent; but, in the year 1584, they returned to their obedience under their legitimate ſovereign, and Imbiſe, the author of all the diſturbance, was depoſed and publicly beheaded, on the 4th of Auguſt, 1585. Louis XIV. king of France, took it the 9th of March, 1678, after a ſiege of ſix days, but reſtored it to Spain, at the treaty of Nimmegen the ſame year, with whom it continued till the allies took it, with the citadel, in the year 1706, after the battle of Ramillies. The French ſeized it by ſtratagem the 5th of July, 1708, under the conduct of brigadier la Faille, but they remained in poſſeſſion only a ſmall time, for the allies, under prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough, beſieged it again the 24th of December, and forced it to capitulate the 30th of the ſame month; the commander, comte de la Motte, lieutenant-general of France, with the garriſon, conſiſting of 14,000 men, being made priſoners. Ghent was erected into a biſhopric in 1559, by pope Paul IV. at the ſolicitation of Philip II. king of Spain, ſubject to the archbiſhop of Malines; beſides the cathedral, it has ſix pariſh churches, and a great many religious houſes; the ſtreets are large, and the market places ſpacious, particularly the Friday's market, in the midſt of which is a ſtatue of Charles V. in his imperial habit. It has conſiderable trade in corn, with cloth, linen, and ſilk manufactures, much aſſiſted by two navigable canals, one to Sas de Ghent, the other to Bruges, Oſtend, &c. The magiſtracy is compoſed of burgomaſters, echevens, and common council. John, the third ſon of Edward III. king of England, was born in this city, and thence called John of Gaunt: 30 miles SW. Antwerp, and 35 N. Lille. Long. 21. 17. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 4. N.—On the 14th of November, 1792, the French took poſſeſſion of this city, the inhabitants of which expreſſed a deſire to be united to France. At Dumourier's retreat, the French evacuated Ghent and the other towns they had taken; but recovered them again, in their general progreſs through the country.

GIBRALEON, a town of Spain, in the country of Seville, on the river Odiel, with a harbour for ſmall fiſhing veſſels. It contains about 150 houſes, divided into two pariſhes, Alphonſo, king of Caſtile, took it from the Moors in the year 1257, and peopled it with Chriſtians; it is ſituated about 10 miles from the Atlantic: 44 miles W. Seville. Long. 9. 45. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 37. 20. N.

GIBRALTAR, a town of Spain, in Andaluſia, but belonging to Great Britain, ſituated on a tongue of land, at the ſouthern extremity of Europe, on the north ſide of the narrow ſea which forms a communication between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic, called the Straits of Gibraltar. Weſtward is a large bay, to which it gives name, behind it, to the eaſt, is a rocky mountain, which riſes 1400 feet above the level of the ſea, called by the ancients Calpe, and in their mythological language, one of the Pillars of Hercules. From the ſummit of this mountain is a moſt extenſive view over a part of Spain and Africa, and on it is built a tower, in which a guard is kept, to give notice of veſſels paſſing the Straits. The town is not large, but ſtrongly fortified: the garriſon conſiſts of 3000 or 4000 men, with upwards of 300 pieces of cannon. At the extremity of a rock, which advances into the ſea, is a large fort, covering a mole made to form a port, and 300 in length, made to facilitate the anchoring of veſſels; towards the land is another mole, with a port; and farther on more fortifications. The bay is two leagues acroſs from eaſt to weſt, and three from north to ſouth. The town contains ſeveral ſtreets, one of which is well paved, the others are narrow and dirty. It has three gates, one Engliſh and one Spaniſh church, and a ſynagogue. The number of Engliſh, beſides the garriſon, is about 2000, and of Spaniards, Portugueſe, Genoeſe, and Jews, about as many. Moors are conſtantly coming from Barbary with cattle, game, fiſh, and fruit. Theſe people call the town Dgebel-Tharek, or Mount Tharek, from the name of a Mooriſh general, who is ſaid to have landed here in the year 712; or perhaps it may be only their mode of pronouncing the word Gibraltar. A fortified line is drawn by the Spaniards from ſea to ſea, to cut off the communication of the garriſon with the reſt of Spain. The Moors ſeized on Gibraltar in the 8th century, and held it without interruption till the 14th, when, in the year 1310, it was taken from them by Perez de Guzman, but they retook it in the year 1332, and held it till the year 1462, when it was retaken by the Spaniards, and has continued in the hands of Chriſtians from that time. In the year 1704, it was taken by Sir George Rook, aſſiſted with ſome Dutch veſſels, and a vain attempt was made to retake it in the ſame year; and again, in 1727, it was beſieged by the Marquis de la Torre, with as little ſucceſs. Since the Engliſh have been maſters of the place, it has been ſo much improved and ſtrengthened, as probably to bid defiance to the utmoſt efforts of an enemy. In the courſe of the American war, the Spaniards again beſieged it: but their memorable attack with floating batteries of upwards of 200 cannon, in ſhips of all ſizes, ended only in diſappointment, in the deſtruction of the ſhips and men employed, and the immortal honour of the brave defenders: 16 miles N. Ceuta, and 70 S. Seville. Long. 11. 19. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 36. 8. N.

GIBRALTAR, a town of South America, in the country of Terra Firma, and province of Venezuela, ſituated on the eaſt coaſt of the lake of Maracaibo. In the environs of which is gathered the beſt cocoa of the province, and an excellent kind of tobacco grows, of high eſteem in Old Spain. The air is exceedingly unwholſome in the rainy ſeaſon, on which account the merchants and planters generally retire at that time to Maracaibo. It is defended by ſome fortifications, but was taken by the French and burned in the year 1679: 50 miles SSE. Maracaibo. Long. 49. 50. W. Ferro. Lat. 10. 4. N.

GIUSMARK, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Curdiſtan: 80 miles SSE. Betlis.

GIUSTENDIL, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Bulgaria; the ſee of a Greek archbiſhop: 80 miles WNW. Sophia.

GIUSTENDIL, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Bulgaria: 24 miles S. Sophia.

GIULIA NOVA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Abruzzo Ultra, on the coaſt of the Adriatic: 12 miles ENE. Teramo.

GIZIGINSKAIA, a gulf at the north-weſt extremity of the Peninſkoi Sea, extending about 50 miles in length, and 16 in breadth. Long. 178. E. Ferro. Lat. 67. to 68. N.

GLADBECK, or Gladbach, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Juliers: 16 miles N. Juliers. Long. 23. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 14. N.

GLADENBACH, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and principality of Upper Heſſe: 12 miles N. Gieſſen, and 8. W. Marburg.

GLADKA, a fort of Ruſſia, in the government of Caucaſus, on the Malva: 36 miles W. Kizliar.

GLAMFORD BRIGGS, corruptly Glandford Bridge, a town of England, in the county of Lincoln, on a river, or canal, called Ancholme, navigable to the Humber, with conſiderable trade in corn, coals, and timber, and a large manufacture of ſkins: 23 miles N. Lincoln, and 156 N. London.

GLAMORGANSHIRE, a county of South Wales, bounded on the north by Brecknockſhire, on the eaſt by Monmouthſhire, on the ſouth by the Briſtol Channel, and on the weſt by Caermarthenſhire; about 48 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 27 from north to ſouth. The greateſt part of the ſea coaſt forms a ſemi-circular ſweep, the weſtern extremity being formed into a narrow beak between the open channel on the one hand, and an arm running round to the Caermarthenſhire coaſt on the other. Juſtin, a petty prince of this country, in the reign of William Rufus, revolting from his ſovereign, Rhys, and finding himſelf not a match for his power, by a raſhneſs, which he repented of when too late, invited over to his aſſiſtance from England, by means of one Ivo, a nobleman, to whom he had married his daughter, Robert Fitz Haimon, a Norman, ſon of Haimon Dentatus, earl of Corbul, who preſently raiſing troops, and aſſociating with him twelve knights, firſt engaged and ſlew Rhys, and then, allured by the fertility of the country, of which he had before enſured to himſelf the poſſeſſion in proſpect, turned his arms againſt Juſtin himſelf, for not keeping his word with Ivo, ſoon diſpoſſeſſed him of the patrimony of his anceſtors, and divided the country between his own followers. On the north and north-eaſt ſides it is very mountainous, the ſoil of the hills extremely varied. In ſome parts they are abſolute rocks, in others full of coal and iron. The ſurface over theſe mines produces plenty of fine wool. What corn grows in the county is principally between the ſouth ſide of the mountains and the ſea, in a ſpacious vale, or plain, open to the latter. The roads over the mountains are exceſſively ſteep, ſtony, ſtrewed, as well as the heaths on each ſide of them, with ſtones of various ſizes, detached from the rocks by the winter rains. The air on the north ſide is ſharp, occaſioned by the long continuance of the ſnow on the hills; but on the ſouth ſide mild and temperate, improved by the ſea breezes. Such is the profuſion of coal and limeſtone in this county, that lime is the general manure of it, and there is ſcarce a cottage that is not white-waſhed regularly once a week. The plenty of coal, and the conveniency of exportation, have brought a large copper work to Swanſea. Glamorganſhire contains one epiſcopal town, Llandaff, and ſeveral others, as Cardiff, Caerphilly, Neath, Brigend, Swanſey, Llantriſant, Marthyr-Tydvil, and Cowbridge. The principal rivers are the Tave, the Neath, the Taw, the Oſmore, and the Rumney. Glamorganſhire is divided into ten hundreds and 118 pariſhes, which contain about 58,000 inhabitants. Two members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. one for the county, and one for the town of Cardiff.

GLAN, a river of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, which runs into the Nahe, 3 miles E. Sobernheim, in the county of Sponheim.

GLAN, a river of Germany, in the duchy of Carinthia, which riſes near Koſtnberg, and joins the Gurck, 4 miles E. Clagenfurt.

GLANDEVES, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Alps; formerly flouriſhing, and the ſee of a biſhop; but the overflowing of the Var compelled a great part of the inhabitants to leave the town, and to remove to Entrevaux, which was not far from it; and it is now almoſt abandoned.

GLANDORE, an harbour of Ireland, in the county of Cork: 3 miles W. Roſs Bay.

GLANE, a river of France, which runs into the Dordogne, near Argental, in the department of the Correze.

GLANDFORD BRIDGE, ſee Glamford Briggs.

GLANMEN, or Glomme, ſee Glomme.

GLANSHAMMAR, a town of Sweden, in the province of Neiricia: 7 miles NE. Orebro.

GLARIS, or Glarus, a canton of Swiſſerland, and eighth in the order of the league, ſurrounded with lofty mountains on all ſides except towards the north; theſe mountains are covered with eternal ſnow. In the lower parts fruit-trees flouriſh very well; the inhabitants cultivate but little grain: their principal riches ariſing from their meadows and paſtures. Theſe paſtures in the Alps are of a ſuperior quality; medicinal plants are abundant, ſo as even to become an object of commerce. The Alps of Glaris afford a large field not only for the botaniſts, but for natural hiſtory in general, in a prodigious variety of uncommon plants, divers metals and minerals, cryſtals, medicinal ſprings, petrefactions, large ſlate, which forms a conſiderable article of exportation, &c. It is ſuppoſed that 10,000 head of cattle and 4000 ſheep may be fed during the ſummer ſeaſon on the mountains of this canton. In the main, however, theſe different productions of the Alps cannot compenſate for the inconveniences ariſing from a cold and mountainous country. The great extent occupied by rocks, precipices, inacceſſible foreſts, barren heaths, and perpetual ſnow, leſſen the enjoyment of man, culture, and population; frequent inundations are cauſed by ſudden thaws or rain, always more abundant in mountainous countries; to theſe may be added the falls of ſnow, of earth and rocks from the mountains, ſtorms and tempeſts. Glaris formerly belonged to the abby of Seckingen, in Swabia. Towards the latter end of the 13th century, it became as a fief, ſubject to the emperor, Rodolphus I. of the houſe of Auſtria. In the year 1351, being oppreſſed by the houſe of Auſtria, the people of Glaris entered into an alliance with the cantons of Schweitz, Lucerne, Zurich, Underwalden, and Uri; by whoſe aſſiſtance they became free, and enjoyed their liberties unmoleſted till 1388, when the Auſtrians made an irruption into the canton, with a force ſufficient, as they arrogantly thought, totally to ſubdue it; pillaging the country and maſſacring the inhabitants. It was then that 350 troops of Glaris, aſſiſted by thirty Switzers, reſiſted the whole ſtrength of the Auſtrian army: the former were poſted advantageouſly upon the mountains, and the latter to the number of 15,000, at a village called Næfels. In this ſituation the Auſtrians began the attack; but were ſoon compelled to retreat with great precipitation, by a ſhower of ſtones poured upon them from the heights: in this moment of confuſion, the inhabitants ruſhed down upon the enemy with ſuch redoubled fury, that they broke their ranks; and after an immenſe ſlaughter, forced the remainder to retire from the canton. In the year 1523, the reformed religion was introduced into this country, but the religious war between the cantons, in the year 1531, prevented its becoming univerſal. The government is purely democratic; every perſon who is ſixteen years of age has a vote in the landſgemeind, or general aſſembly, which, except on extraordinary occaſions, is only held yearly, in the month of May. This general aſſembly has a right to make new laws, levy contributions, make alliances, and treat of war or peace. The executive power is entruſted to a landrath, or council, compoſed of forty-eight Proteſtant members and fifteen Roman Catholics. The chief of the republic is called Landamman, who is alternately choſen from the two religions, only with this difference, that when a Proteſtant, his office continues three years, and when a Catholic, only two. Every man from the age of ſixteen to ſixty is obliged to regiſter himſelf in the national militia. The contribution of this canton for the army of the confederacy is 400 men. The whole population amounts to more than 16,000 ſouls.

GLARIS, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of a canton of the ſame name, ſituated upon the Linth; large and populous. The town-houſe is a handſome ſtructure. The hoſpital and the church ſerve both for Proteſtants and Roman Catholics. It is the ſeat of juſtice, and the aſſemblies of the people are held here, in the open air, according to the cuſtom of the ancient Gauls and Germans: 32 miles E. Lucerne. Long. 26. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 26. 58. N.

GLASENDORF, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Konigingratz: 6 miles NNW. Trautenau.

GLASENDORF, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 10½ miles SW. Patſchkau.

GLASGOW, a city of Scotland, in the county of Lanerk, ſituated on the banks of the Clyde, which, by an act of parliament, and at a conſiderable expence, has been within this laſt thirty years made navigable for veſſels drawing ſeven feet ſix inches water. It was formerly the ſee of a biſhop, ſaid to have been founded in the ſixth century, and erected into an archbiſhopric in the fifteenth. The cathedral eſcaped the ill-directed zeal of the reformers, and ſtill remains at leaſt a venerable monument of Gothic architecture, preſerved by the care of the inhabitants. In the year 1172, Glaſgow was erected into a royal borough. In the year 1611, the city received a charter from James VI. and, in 1636, another from king Charles I. with conſiderable power and privileges, which charters were confirmed by acts of parliament in 1661 and 1690. The principal trade of Glaſgow formerly was the curing and exporting of ſalmon and herrings, the principal market for which was France, from whence they imported wines, brandy, and ſalt. On the union with England, in the year 1707, the merchants of Glaſgow firſt entered into the American trade. And, in the year 1775, they imported upwards of 57,000 hogſheads of tobacco, 5000 of ſugar, upward of 110 puncheons of rum, and 500 bags of cotton. Since the decline of the American trade, the merchants have found out new channels, and the trade is ſtill increaſing. Varieties of manufactures are carried on at Glaſgow, the principal of which ſeem to be in the article of cotton, pottery, coarſe earthen ware, hats, ſtockings, gloves, ropes, cordage, glaſs, and ſeveral others. The number of inhabited houſes in Glaſgow is upwards of 10,000, and near 62,000 inhabitants. Glaſgow was originally one pariſh, but now, for the benefit of the poor and eaſe of miniſters, divided into eight, with as many churches, beſides three chapels of eaſe. Glaſgow contains ſeveral hoſpitals and charitable foundations, and a public infirmary. The univerſity of Glaſgow was founded in the year 1454, under the direction of a chancellor, rector, dean, principal, and fourteen profeſſors: 38 miles W. Edinburgh, and 43 SW. Perth. Long. 4. 15. W. Greenwich. Lat 55. 53. N.

GLASHUTTEN, or Glaſitten, a town of Hungary; celebrated for its hot baths, and near it are ſome rich gold mines: 7 miles from Schemnitz.

GLASLOUGH, a town of Ireland, in the county of Monaghan: 5 miles NNE. Monaghan.

GLASSCARRICK POINT, a cape on the eaſtern coaſt of Ireland, in the county of Wexford. Long. 6. 12. W. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 35. N.

GLASSHUTTEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, near which is a ſilver mine: 3 miles from Dreſden.

GLASSTENBURG, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Connecticut: 17 miles WNW. Windham.

GLASTONBURY, a town of England, in the county of Somerſet, which owes its origin to a celebrated abby, ſituated in a low marſhy country; ſuppoſed to have been built about the year 708, in the reign of king Ina, who endowed it with great privileges. About the year 873, it was ruined by the Danes; but was re-edified by king Edmund, the ninth Saxon monarch, who exempted it from all impoſitions and oppreſſions, and rendered it intirely ſubject to, and dependent on, the abby. In this ſtate it continued till the year 1184, when both it and the abby were conſumed by fire. It was again rebuilt by the liberality of king Henry III.; but on the 11th of September, 1276, it was once more deſtroyed by that dreadful earthquake which precipitated the church of St. Michael from the Tor hill, and greatly damaged other ſtructures in the country. It now principally conſiſts of two ſtreets, in both of which many houſes are either entirely built, or patched up with ſtones from the abby. The town of Glaſtonbury comprehends two pariſhes, which contain upwards of 360 houſes. The abby is ſaid to owe its foundation to Joſeph of Arimathea, who planted his ſtaff, that is, took up his abode here, and built an oratory in honour of the Virgin Mary. In the year 542, the celebrated king Arthur, after being mortally wounded, was brought and interred there. In the year 605, a regular ſociety was inſtituted by St. Auguſtine, who was ſent into England by pope Gregory the Great to preach the goſpel. About this time it obtained the name of Glaſteinbyri, by which, with ſome little variation, it has ever ſince been called. Several biſhops and kings were great benefactors; but Ina excelled all his predeceſſors in munificence; he pulled down the old monaſtery, and rebuilt it in the moſt ſumptuous and magnificent manner, to the honour of Chriſt, and the apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul; adorning the edifice with a coſtly chapel, garniſhed and plated over with 2640 pounds weight of ſilver, and an altar with 264 pounds weight of gold. Beſides which he gave rich ornaments thereto, as a chalice, cenſer, candleſticks, baſon, bucket, images, and pall for the altar, of incredible value, with precious gems for the embroidery of the celebrating robes. Succeeding monarchs were zealous in ratifying, confirming, and adding to all the grants that had been made to this illuſtrious foundation. In ſhort (to uſe the words of a Glaſtonbury hiſtorian) kings and queens, not only of the Weſt Saxons, but of other kingdoms of the heptarchy, ſeveral archbiſhops and biſhops, many dukes, and the nobility of both ſexes, thought themſelves happy in encreaſing the revenues of this venerable houſe, to obtain them a place of ſepulture therein. However, during the dreadful depredations of the Danes, both the monaſtery and town of Glaſtonbury began to drop their ſplendour, and exhibit the appearance of ruin and diſtreſs. To reſtore it to its ancient dignity was the buſineſs of king Edmund, who appointed St. Dunſtan abbot over it, and permitted him to make free uſe of his regal treaſury to enable him to rebuild it. The lands, which before the Norman conqueſt, the monaſtery of Glaſtonbury poſſeſſed, by the grants of different kings and others, were immenſe in number and in value. Richard Whiting, the laſt abbot of Glaſtonbury, was unwilling to ſurrender his abby to king Henry VIII. or to lend an ear to any of the ſolicitations which were offered him, whereupon, by falſe pretence, they ſeized on him at his manor-houſe of Sharpham, in the year 1539, and without much formal proceſs as to law or equity, he was dragged on a hurdle to the Torr hill, where, without the leaſt regard to his age, his ſanctity, or his entreaties to reviſit his convent, he was hanged; his head ſet upon the abby gate, and his quarters ſent to Wells, Bath, Ivelcheſter, and Bridgewater. The fate of the abbot and the abby being thus decided, the buildings and revenues of this houſe, which had flouriſhed for ſuch a length of time, became the objects of depredation. Thoſe riches which had flowed from the treaſury of monarchs, and thoſe ſtructures, which had outbraved the ſhock of time, and the inclemency of ages, ſunk together. The eſtates of the monaſtery, devolving to the crown, were either granted or ſold away. The revenues, in 1444, were valued at 1151l. 6s. 8d. and, in 1534, at 3311l. 7s. 6d. The foundation plot of ground on which the abby and its offices were erected, compriſed no leſs than ſixty acres of ground. Of this immenſe range of buildings, ſcarce a veſtige now is to be ſeen; and all that remains of this once magnificent pile, are ſome fragments of the church, St. Joſoph's chapel, and the abbot's kitchen. The reſt is reduced to a heap of rubbiſh, loading the ſurface of its ſcite with unſeemly ruins. Not only the town, but the environs of Glaſtonbury abound with religious reliques. The moſt conſpicuous is the Tor or Tower of St. Michael, ſtanding upon a very high hill, north-eaſtward from the town, on which poor Whiting met his untimely end. On this bleak and deſolate ſpot, the ſaints Phaganus and Diruvianus erected a ſmall oratory to the honour of St Michael, the archangel, which was re-edified by St. Patrick, and beautified by ſome of his ſucceſſors. The ſucceeding abbots enlarged upon the ancient plan, and here built not only a large and elegant church and monaſtery; but alſo other buildings, dwelling houſes, and offices; and obtained many grants of privileges from ſeveral of the kings. The whole of the buildings which had been erected on this hill by ſeveral abbots, at a vaſt expence, the labour being very great to convey materials up the immenſe aſcent, were totally deſtroyed by the earthquake which happened in 1271, but afterwards more ſplendidly rebuilt, and that church erected, of which the tower ſtill remains, and lifts its head into the clouds; an object of admiration to travellers, and an ornament to the ſurrounding country: 5 miles SSW. Wells, and 126 W. London.

GLATT, a river of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, which runs into the Neckar, two miles N. from Sults, in the duchy of Wurtemberg.

GLATZ-KOGEL, a mountain of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 12 miles S. Steyr.

GLATZ, a town of Sileſia, and capital of a principality of the ſame name, ſituated on the Neiſſe, built on the ſide of a mountain, on the ſummit of which is a large and ſtrong caſtle. The town contains about 400 houſes within the walls, and as many in four fauxbourgs. It is a place of conſiderable trade. It has been frequently pillaged and burnt, and the ſubject of inceſſant diſcords between the Poles and Bohemians, not to mention the two deſtructive fires of 1015 and 1033. In 1056, it was alſo taken and laid in aſhes by the emperor Conrad. In 1463, 146[illegible], and 1524, it again ſuffered by fire. Its ſevereſt ſiege, however, was that which it held out, in 1622, againſt the united forces of the emperor, Ferdinand II. his allies. In 1742, the Pruſſians took it by capitulation: 25 miles W. Neiſſe, and 88 E. Prague. Long. 34. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 16. N.

GLATZ, a principality of Sileſia, lying on the borders of Bohemia, ſurrounded on all ſides by mountains. It is every where mountainous, interſected with vallies, meadows, corn-fields, woodlands, and ſmall rivers. In a good year it produces wheat ſufficient, in bad ſeaſons it is ſupplied from the neighbouring countries. It has excellent paſture grounds, which feed great numbers of cattle; wood and game are plentiful. It contains quarries of mill-ſtones, free-ſtone, and marble. Jaſper, topazes, and cornelians are found in ſome places. Here are mines of coal, copper, and ſilver, with ſeveral mineral ſprings. Glatz has belonged to ſeveral princes: from the year 1561 to 1742 it was annexed to the crown of Bohemia. In the year 1742, the empreſs Maria Thereſa, ceded it to Frederick II. king of Pruſſia, and his heirs for ever, with entire ſovereignty, and abſolute independence of the crown of Bohemia. The country forms only one circle, divided into ſix diſtricts. Glatz is the capital.

GLIUBIN, a town of European Turkey, in Dalmatia: eighteen miles SE. Moſtar.

GLOCOVNI, a river of Croatia, which riſes near Creutz, and runs into the Lonia.

GLOUAU, a principality of Sileſia, ſituated on each ſide of the Oder, on the borders of Poland. It produces corn and wine in plenty, the foreſts are well furniſhed with wood, and in ſome parts are mines of iron, a great number of ſheep are fed, and the wool is wrought into different manufactures. It is divided into ſix circles, Great Glogau is the capital. In the year 1241, it was governed by princes, of its own, after that it belonged to the king of Poland, to the king of Bohemia, to the emperor, and laſt of all to the king of Pruſſia.

GLOGAU (Great), a town of Sileſia, and capital of the principality of Glogau, built in the year 1110, on the ſouth ſide of the Oder, and now conſidered as a fortreſs, being taken by the Pruſſians in the year 1741, who ſtrengthened the fortifications. It is the ſeat of the governor, and a commandant of divers tribunals, a biſhop's court, &c. It contains two Catholic churches, one of which is collegiate, three convents, a Lutheran church and ſchool, and a chapel for Calviniſts: 50 miles SSW. Poſen, and 32 NNE. Buntzlau. Long. 33. 59. E. Glos la Ferrière, a town of France, in the department of the Orne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of l'Aigle: 8 leagues W. Evreux, and 2 N. l'Aigle.

GLOUCESTER, a city of England, and capital of the county to which it gives name, on the eaſt ſide of the Severn; formerly ſurrounded with walls, and defended by a caſtle, which was decayed in Camden's time: this caſtle was built in the reign of William the Conqueror. Glouceſter was taken from the Britons about the year 570, by Ceaulin, the firſt king of the Weſt Saxons. It afterwards came into the hands of the Mercians, and a nunnery was founded here by Ofric, king of Northumberland, by permiſſion of Ethelred, king of the Mercians, and a church was built by Edelfleda, a famous Mercian lady. In the latter end of the 9th century the Danes ravaged the country, and fixed their abode in this town. In the middle of the 11th century the older churches being deſtroyed, a new one was built, for the monks, by Aldred, biſhop of Worceſter, afterwards archbiſhop of York, which, in ſucceeding times, received conſiderable additions; and was more eſpecially enlarged and repaired with the offerings made at the tomb of king Edward II. who was buried here, under a monument of alabaſter. In the year 1541, Glouceſter was erected into a biſhopric, by king Henry VIII.; and the abby-church became a cathedral. Glouceſter was plundered by prince Edward, ſon of Edward III. during the Barons' wars. In the year 1643, Glouceſter declared for the parliament, being ſupported by a garriſon, under the command of colonel Maſſey. King Charles I. laid ſiege to it in perſon; but, for want of ſufficient neceſſaries, was not able to take the town before the earl of Eſſex was ſent to its relief, on which the king was compelled to retire. During the ſiege ſix churches were deſtroyed out of eleven ſo that Glouceſter now contains five churches and a cathedral. The city contains four principal ſtreets, beſides ſeveral ſmaller, well paved, and in general well built. It was erected into a borough by king John, and a charter of corporation granted by king Henry III. The trade is conſiderable on account of the Severn. In the reign of William the Conqueror, and before, the principal trade conſiſted in manufacturing iron. Their tribute, as appears in Doomſday Book, demanded by the king, was 26 icres of iron, and 100 iron bars, for the uſe of the kings fleet, and a few pints of honey: (an icre is ten bars). The principal manufacture now is making pins. Beſides the churches for eſtabliſhed religion, there are places of worſhip for diſſenters and quakers, with ſeveral charity ſchools, and a county infirmary. Two markets are held weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday. Glouceſter ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. By the laſt charter, granted by king Charles II. the corporation conſiſts of a mayor, high ſteward, recorder, twelve aldermen, town-clerk, and two ſheriffs, &c.: 34 miles NNE. Briſtol, 26 S. Worceſter, and 106 WNW. London. Long. 2. 15. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 48. N.

GLOUCESTER, a county of the ſtate of Rhode Iſland, in North America.

GLOUCESTER, a town of the United States of America, in Jerſey, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the Delaware: 5 miles S. Philadelphia.

GLOUCESTER, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia, ſituated on the north ſide of the York river: 20 miles SE. Weſt Point. Long. 76. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 37. 18. N.

GLOUCESTER ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, about two leagues long, and a mile wide, ſurrounded with rocks, againſt which the ſea beats with great violence. It is inhabited, and the men appeared armed with long pikes or poles. Long. 140. 4. W. Greenwich. Lat. 19. 15. S.

GLOUCESTER ISLANDS, two iſlands in the South Pacific Ocean. One, Long. 146. W. Greenwich. Lat. 20. 38. S. The other, Long. 146. 15. Lat. 20. 34. S.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Worceſterſhire and Warwickſhire, on the eaſt by Oxfordſhire, on the ſouth by Wiltſhire and Somerſetſhire, and on the weſt by Monmouthſhire, the Briſtol Channel, and Herefordſhire. It is divided into twenty-eight hundreds, which contain one city, twenty-ſix market towns, and 280 pariſhes. The length from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt about 65 miles, and the breadth from 20 to 30. The ſoil and cultivation of Glouceſterſhire differ in different parts. On the Cotſwold hills the ſoil is in general loamy, with ſtones; the earth ſhallow, ſeldom allowing the plough to enter more than four or five inches, beneath which is generally a kind of limeſtone. In ſome places the land is ſtiff and ſour. About Fairford and Cirenceſter the ſoil is richer and deeper. The farms in general are large, great quantities of ſheep are fed here, formerly celebrated for the fineneſs of their wool, and the ſmallneſs of their fleece. It is not improbable that the fine woolled ſheep of Spain might originally have been procured from Cotſwold, ſent over by Richard I. or Edward I. This breed of ſheep has been changed for others of a larger kind, which produce a larger fleece of coarſer wool. Here are many conſiderable dairy farms, and between the hills are ſome excellent meadows. What is called the Vale of Berkeley is an extenſive and fertile plain, lying on both ſides of the Severn, in the ſouth-weſt part of the county. This part of the county is celebrated for its excellent cheeſe. The vale about the city of Glouceſter contains excellent meadow and paſture land. Towards Tewkeſbury the ſoil is a ſandy loam, rich and deep, chiefly employed in grazing and dairying. In the foreſt of Dean, it was formerly ſuppoſed the beſt ſhip-timber grew: this foreſt at preſent contains but a ſmall part of what it did formerly; however, ſome pains are taken to preſerve what remains. The woollen manufacture is carried on to a great extent in this county, particularly at Durſley, Stroud, Wotton-Underedge, Painſwick, Minchin-Hampton, and their neighbourhood. Mines of coals abound in Kingſwood and the neighbourhood of Briſtol, and mines of iron in the foreſt of Dean. Great quantities of cyder are made in the villages on the banks of the Severn, a kind of which, called Styre cyder, is almoſt peculiar to the weſtern banks of that river. Beſides the city of Glouceſter, the principal towns are Cirenceſter, Tewkeſbury, Berkeley, Camden, Durſley, Newnham, Marſhfield, Dean, Painſwick, Tetbury, Cheltenham, Hampton, or Minching-Hampton, Fairford, Sodbury, Wotton-Underedge, Lechlade, Wick-ware, Winchcomb, Stroud, Colford, Newent, Stow on the Wold, Morton, North-leach, Thornbury, and Stanley. Eight members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. for the county, Glouceſter, Cirenceſter, and Tewkeſbury, two each.

GLUBOKAIA, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Kolivan: 72 miles E. Semipolatnoi.

GLUCHOV, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Novgorod Sieverſkoi: 40 miles ESE. Novgorod Sieverſkoi.

GLUCKSBURG, a town of Denmark, with a fortreſs, in the duchy of Sleſwick: 3 leagues E. Flenſburg.

GLUCKSTADT, a ſea-port town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Holſtein, belonging to Denmark, ſituated on the Elbe, which at this place receives a ſmall river, called the Rhine. Gluckſtadt is regular and well built. The market place looks into the main ſtreets. The adjacent country being hollow and marſhy, a ſtone cauſeway of near three quarters of a mile in length has been carried along it from Krempe. On the land ſide the town may be laid under water. There being no ſprings here, the greateſt part of the houſes have ciſterns for the receiving of rain, and thoſe which are without ſuch conveniences are obliged to uſe the harbour water, or that of the new moat. Storms and inundations being frequent in theſe parts, the inhabitants have not been negligent in making proper fences. This town is the ſeat of the king's regency, and the offices and courts connected with it. Both the garriſon and palace congregation frequent the town church. Here is alſo a free grammar ſchool. The Calviniſts are permitted a church, the Roman Catholics a chapel, and the Jews a ſynagogue. In 1738, a commercial college was inſtituted here by king Chriſtian VI. it being a place of ſome trade, and in 1750, king Frederick V. eſtabliſhed an office for keeping the harbour in good condition. Adjoining to this harbour is a baſon for the reception of veſſels. Gluckſtadt was built in 1620, by permiſſion of Chriſtian IV. in a waſte called the Wilderneſs, who, in the patent granted to it, gave orders that it ſhould be named Gluckſtadt, or the Fortunate Town, conferring on it at the ſame time many cuſtoms, rights, and privileges, as enjoyed by the town of Wilſter, and ſoon after it was inveſted with the Lubeck and Hamburgh rights. The palace of Gluckſburg here, which was erected by the ſame king, has been long ſince pulled down. The town has been ſeveral times beſieged, particularly in 1628, by the imperialiſts, but has never been taken. The king of Denmark attempted to oblige ſhips paſſing up the Elbe to pay toll here, but the ſtrong reſiſtance which was made to it by all the powers of Europe occaſioned it to be given up: 28 miles NW. Hamburg. Long. 26. 39. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 54. N.

GLUMMEN, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Natangen: 24 miles S. Konigſberg.

GLURENTZ, or Glurns, a town of Germany, in the county of Tyrol, ſituated on the river Adige, built in the year 1362, and ſurrounded with walls in 1530: 36 miles W. Brixen, and 13 W. Tyrol. Long. 28. 9. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 44. N.

GLYN, a county of Georgia, in the United States of America.

GNAA, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria: 24 miles SE. Graz, and 80 S. Vienna.

GNESEN, or Gneſno, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Kaliſch, and ſaid to be the moſt ancient town in the country: founded in the year 550. In the year 1000 it was erected into an archbiſhopric: and at the council of Conſtance the primate was declared primate of Poland: 100 miles NE. Breſlau, and 160 W. Cracow. Long. 35. 55. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 28. N.

GNIAFDA, a town of Hungary: 7 miles WSW. Palotza.

GOA, an iſland in the Indian Sea, near the weſt coaſt of Hindooſtan, ſeparated from the continent by a river called Mandova, which ſoon after runs into the ſea; about eight leagues in circumference. The ſoil is fertile, eſpecially in the vallies; the trees are always covered with leaves, flowers, and fruit; and abundance of ſprings iſſue from the mountains. The rainy ſeaſon continues here from June till September or October; and the land floods bring down ſuch quantities of mud and ſand, as ſtop up the haven and impede the navigation. During this time the weather is very hot after ſun-riſe, when the rains ceaſe; yet before the rains begin, that is, in the months of April and May, the weather is ſtill more ſultry, but from October to March it is very moderate.

GOA, a city, and capital of the Portugueſe ſettlements in India, the ſeat of a viceroy, and ſee of an archbiſhop, taken by the Portugueſe general Albuquerque, in the year 1510. The port of Goa is repreſented as one of the beſt in the Indies, and for this character it ſtands in ſome meaſure obliged to nature; but the Portugueſe have ſpared no pains to heighten and improve thoſe advantages, as well as to fortify it with many caſtles and towers, furniſhed with abundance of good cannon. Beyond theſe caſtles the channel becomes narrower, ſometimes to one, ſometimes to two miles; and its banks are planted with the beſt fruits and fineſt trees India affords. Eight miles up is the town of Goa. Half way upon the right ſide, is a palace, called Paſſo de Dangi, where formerly the viceroys reſided, but at preſent it ſerves as a barrack for the garriſon: there begins a ſtrong broad wall, two miles in length, for a footpath, when the country is overflowed, and a great deal of ſalt is gathered thereabouts. This channel, that makes ſo noble a port, runs many miles up the country, dividing it into ſeveral fruitful iſlands and peninſulas, which plentifully furniſh the city with neceſſaries. Adjoining to this port is the haven of Murmugon, formed by the other channel, that runs between the iſland of Goa and peninſula of Salſete, and ſupplies a ſafe retreat to the ſhips that come from Portugal, and other parts, when they are ſhut out of the port by the ſands which the river Mandova brings down, when ſwollen by the firſt rains of June; the paſſage not being open till October. This port of Murmugon is defended by the caſtle of the ſame name, ſeated in the iſland of Salſete, in which there is a good garriſon, and the fortifications are well ſupplied with cannon. At the ſouth entrance into the channel, a little beyond the forts on the right hand, are ſeen the remains of Old Goa, and from thence to the new city there is a commodious road, elegantly adorned with trees for fruit and ſhade. What is ſtill ſtyled the new city, carries evident marks of decay; for, though the walls are kept in good repair, and are every where well ſupplied with cannon, yet taking in, as they do, a compaſs of twelve miles, they ſerve to ſhow what the city once was, in compariſon of what it now is. In the time of its proſperity, there was nothing could be compared with it in the Indies, and very few cities in Europe were either larger or better built. The public ſtructures ſtill remain, and bear inconteſtable evidence of its former grandeur. The number of inhabitants is ſaid to be, in all, about 20,000: of theſe the native Portugueſe amount to a very ſmall number; the Meſtizos are more numerous, the Canarins, or natives, are as black as jet, but have long black hair, and many of them fine features; multitudes of negro ſlaves, and Pagans of different nations, make up the reſt of the people. It is generally agreed, that the men are for the moſt part proud, indolent, jealous, revengeful, and indigent; the women lazy, laſcivious, and as well ſkilled in poiſoning as any in the world: 215 miles SSE. Bombay. Long. 73. 46. E. Greenwich. Lat. 15. 28. N.

GOA, a town of the iſland of Celebes, near the ſouth coaſt. Long. 120. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 5. 12. S.

GOEREE, ſee Goree.

GOES, a town of Portugal, in the province of Beira: 3 leagues E. Coimbra.

GOES, or Ter-Goes, a town of the United Dutch States, in Zealand, ſituated on the north coaſt of the iſland of South Bevelandt, on an arm of the Scheld, with which it is connected by means of a canal. It was beſieged by the Flemings, in the year 1300, and the inhabitants defended themſelves with ſuch bravery, that their enemies were compelled to raiſe the ſiege, after having loſt 1800 men. It anciently belonged to the lords of Borſſele, but that illuſtrious family being extinct, the town deſcended to Jacqueline, Comteſſe of Holland, who permitted the inhabitants to build ramparts round it, in the year 1417. It was well nigh deſtroyed by an inundation of the ſea, in 1548; ſix years after, great part of it was conſumed by fire; but it ſoon recovered, by means of privileges granted it by Charles V. and its great ſale of ſalt. The States became maſters of it in the year 1577, and prince Maurice cauſed it to be fortified. It has at preſent ſix gates, that next the water fortified with two good baſtions; on the other ſide of the town are two more. The great church being burned down in 1618, was afterwards rebuilt, and is now a handſome ſtructure; the town is not large, but carries on conſiderable trade, particularly in ſalt and grain: 10 miles E. Fluſhing. Long. 21. 22. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 30. N.

GOLCONDA, a country of Hindooſtan, in the Deccan, bounded on the north by the country of Berar, on the eaſt by the Circars, on the ſouth by the Myſore country and the Carnatic, and on the weſt by Dowlatabad and Viſiapour. It takes its name from a fortreſs. The king of Golconda, at one time, maintained in his pay above 500,000 ſoldiers, but, in the year 1667, the reigning prince became tributary to Aurengzebe. The kings had vaſt revenues, ariſing from the properties of lands, cuſtoms of merchandizes and proviſions; but chiefly the diamond mines: for Golconda may be ſaid to be the country of diamonds. Thoſe who were allowed to work towards Maſulipatam, paid a pagoda every hour they worked, whether they found diamonds or not. The chief mines are in the Carnatic, and in ſeveral places towards Viſiapour; he had 6000 men continually at work in them, who daily found near three pounds weight of theſe precious ſtones; and nobody digs there but for the king. Winter begins here in June, with rain and thunder. The thunder is of a ſhort continuance; but the rains pour down, with furious ſtorms of wind, till the middle of July, with ſome intervals of fine weather. In Auguſt, September, and October, great rains fall again, and ſwell the rivers to a very dangerous degree of depth and rapidity. Theſe rains render the land exceedingly fertile, eſpecially in fruits. Vines are in great plenty; and of the grapes, which are ripe in January, they make white wine. They have yearly two crops of rice, and ſeveral other kinds of grain. Hydrabad is the capital.

GOLCONDA, a fortreſs of Hindooſtan, formerly the reſidence of the kings of Golconda. This fortreſs, for extent, might be called a city, in the middle of which riſes a hill like a ſugar loaf, the ſides of which are ſurrounded by the king's palace. The walls of the fortreſs are built of ſtone, three feet diameter, encompaſſed with deep ditches, divided into tanks full of good water. After all, it has no fortifications except five towers, which, as well as the walls, are mounted with a great many cannon. The palace is very large, and well ſituated for air, and has a good proſpect over Hydrabad. The ſepulchres of the king who built Golconda, and his five ſucceſſors, are about two muſket ſhot from the caſtle; each in the middle of a garden, with the tombs of their relations about them. In the year 1687, this fortreſs was beſieged by Aurungzebe, but being unable to ſucceed, he corrupted the governor, who ſurrendered, againſt the will of his ſovereign. The king of Golconda offered to pay a tribute of 3,700,000 rupees, and become his vaſſal; but the conqueror refuſed, and entered the place in triumph: 5 miles WNW. Hydrabad.

GOLD COAST, a name given to a country of Africa, near the Atlantic, about 120 leagues in length from eaſt to weſt, between the rivers Ancobar and Volta. It contains a variety of different ſtates and kingdoms, and received its name from the immenſe quantity of gold which it produces. Several of the European nations have ſettlements here. The climate is exceedingly hot from October to March, the reſt of the months are tolerable. The natives enjoy a good ſtate of health, and are ſubject to but few diſeaſes; to Europeans the climate is frequently unwholeſome, and often proves fatal, eſpecially in the months of July and Auguſt. The domeſtic animals are bulls, cows, ſheep, and goats, the laſt of which are innumerable, and their fleſh excellent; the mutton and beef are neither of them good; but of all animal food dog's fleſh is moſt preferred by the Negroes. Other animals are elephants, tygers, buffaloes, jackalls, wild boars, deer of different ſizes, from the ſize of a ſmall cow to that of a hare, wild-cats, porcupines, ſluggards, ſeveral ſpecies of monkies, rats, mice, &c. Among the birds are pheaſants, parrots, maccaws, turtle-doves, and ſeveral others. The reptiles are numerous, ſnakes, ſerpents, vipers, lizards, ſcorpions, centipedes, and ſpiders, &c. GORCUM, a town of Holland, ſituated on the river Linge, at its union with the Wahal ; is the ſecond of the ſmall cities which ſend deputies to the ſtates of the province ; it was antiently called Gorichem, which name is now given it in all public acts, Gorcum being only a corruption. It was built in the year 1230, by one of the lords of Arckel, of which country it is the capital ; with a caſtle, which was deſtroyed by the citizens, in the year 1578, during the revolution. From the ſteeple of the principal church, may be ſeen two and twenty walled cities, beſides a great number of towns and villages ; before the revolution it had one pariſh church, and three religious houſes. The city is governed by two burgomaſters, an officer called Droſſart or grand Baily, and ſeven echevins, who are choſen by the common council, and changed every year. The comte de Lumay, after he had taken Gorcum for the States, in the year 1572, put to death nineteen prieſts and other religious people, with the moſt cruel torments, cutting off their noſes and their ears, and then hanging them in a row near the Brill ; to the credit of the prince of Orange and the States, he was diſgraced, and died a few years after at Liege, from the bite of a mad dog : 12 miles E. GOREE, a ſmall iſland in the Atlantic, near the coaſt of Africa, about two miles in circumference, within a cannon ſhot of the ſhore. Notwithſtanding its ſituation, the air is ſaid to be cool and temperate all the year round, and the inhabitants refreſhed by alternate breezes from the land and ſea. Beſides the multitude of ſurrounding rocks, that render it almoſt inacceſſible, except at two particular bays, a late director, M. de. St. Jean, has embelliſhed the fort with ſeveral new buildings, as well as fortified it by works, which render it a place of great ſtrength. By the diligence of this gentleman, ſeveral freſh ſprings, ſo much wanted, have been diſcovered in the iſland, the gardens have been planted with excellent fruit trees : all kinds of vegetables have been raiſed in great abundance ; and from a ſmall, barren, and deſpicable iſland, he has made it one of the ſafeſt, pleaſanteſt, and moſt important ſettlements in all Africa. Goree was ceded to the Dutch, in the year 1617, by Biram, king of Cape Verd, and they immediately ſecured it by a fort, built on a rock to the north-weſt, to which they gave the name of Naſſau Fort, but finding that this ſituation did not command the harbour, they erected another fortification, called Orange Fort, ſomewhat nearer the ſhore. This eſtabliſhment they kept till they were driven out by admiral Holmes, in 1633, who placed an Engliſh garriſon in it. Two years after it was retaken by De Ruyter, when Mr. Abercromby, the governor, and garriſon, were forced to ſurrender priſoners of war. Upon this the Dutch augmented the fortifications, and the iſland enjoyed a perfect tranquillity till the year 1677, when a French ſquadron, commanded by the count d'Eſtrées, arrived off the harbour on the 30th of October. Next day, Hapſar, the Dutch governor, was ſummoned to ſurender, and, on his refuſal, the count made preparations to bombard Orange Fort, which obliged the garriſon to evacuate it, and retire to Fort Naſſau, where they expected to capitulate upon honourable terms, though they were ſoon forced to ſurrender at diſcretion. Soon after M. du Coſſe arrived at Goree, with a forty gun ſhip, and ſolemnly took poſſeſſion of the iſland, in the name of the Senegal company, and concluded a treaty with the king and negroes of the neighbouring country, on the ſame conditions the Dutch enjoyed while they poſſeſſed the iſland. As this meaſure which he had taken voluntarily, was approved on his return by the court, he was ſent back the following year in quality of governor, with preſents to the negro kings ; and the ſame year this conqueſt was ſecured to the company by the treaty of Nimmegen. No ſooner were the French in full poſſeſſion, than they ſet to work in repairing and adding new works to both the forts, calling the lower fort Vermandois, and the higher St. Michael Before the year 1681, ſeveral unſucceſsful attempts were made by the Dutch to recover a place of ſuch importance to trade ; but all of them proved abortive. Long. 17. 30. GOSSLAR, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, on the river Goſe, which, at a ſmall diſtance from the town, runs into the Ocker. It is a free and imperial town, ſurrounded on one ſide by the biſhopric of Hildeſheim, and on the other by the principality of Wolfenbuttel. The houſes are generally old, except in a part of the town which was burned down in 1728, where houſes have been rebuilt in a more modern ſtyle. The principal commerce of the town ariſes from the mines of iron and lead found in the Rammel mountain, near which it is ſituated, in beer and proviſions. The town was founded in the year 922, by Henry the Fowler, who reſided and held ſeveral diets here, as did ſome of his ſucceſſors. Here are four pariſh churches, two chapters, and two Lutheran convents. The two chapters depend immediately upon the empire, the one is called the chapel of the emperor, the other the chapel of the empreſs. Goſslar occupies the ſeventh place at the diet on the Rheniſh bench, and the ſecond at the aſſemblies of the circle. The Roman month is ſixty florins, and the tax to the Imperial chamber 184 rixdollars 79 kruitzers, beſides which it pays an annual ſum of money to the duke of Brunſwick, who is hereditary protector: 30 miles S. Brunſwick. Long. 28. 3. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 50. N.

GOSSNITZ, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and principality of Altenburg: 3 miles E. Schmollen.

GOSSWEINSTEIN, or Goſſmanſtein, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and biſhopric of Bamberg: 23 miles NNE. Nuremberg, and 20 ESE. Bamberg. Long. 29. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 45. N.

GOSTITZ, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 2 miles S. Patſchkau.

GOSTYNEN, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Rawa; this town is remarkable for having been the priſon of Demetrius Suſki, Czar of Muſcovy, who was confined to the day of his death in the citadel: 36 miles N. Rawa.

GOSZITZ, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and circle of Neuſtadt: 3 miles W. Ziegenbruck.

GOTHA, a principality of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, bounded on the north by the electorate of Saxony, on the eaſt by the duchy of Weimar, on the ſouth by the county of Henneberg, and on the weſt by the principality of Eiſenach. The country abounds in grain and fruit; the ſouthern diviſion contains a part of the foreſt of Thuringia, and ſome mine works. The whole duchy contains twelve towns, and more than 200 churches. The ſtate conſiſts of three claſſes, that is, of the counts, the nobility, and ſome towns, which are convoked by the prince. The dukes are deſcended from the grandſon of John William Erneſt the Pious, whoſe ſons formed ſeven different branches, ſome of which are extinct. Gotha was the principal. The others which yet remain are Saxe-Meinungen, Saxe-Hildburghauſen, and Saxe-Saalfeld. The Roman month is forty-eight florins twenty kruitzers, and the tax to the Imperial chamber ſixty-two rixdollars ſixty-four kruitzers. The duke maintains a guard of 160 men, two regiments, each compoſed of 800 men, and a corps of artillery. The principal rivers are the Leine and the Neiſſe.

GOTHA, a city of Germany, and capital of a principality of the ſame name, ſeated on a riſing ground, near the Leine, from which, in the year 1369, the landgrave, Balthaſar, drew one branch near the town; but duke Erneſt improved this work, and conveyed it through all the ſtreets by means of ſtone canals. Gotha is one of the beſt and handſomeſt towns in Thuringia. In 1715, in the town, and without the gates, were 1030 houſes paying ſcot and lot, and within its walls are 906, excluſive of a great many others which ſtand on the ramparts. In it, too, is an hoſpital for the ſoldiery, with two ſchools for children deſcended from them, and the barracks, in the largeſt of which the cadets are inſtructed in the ſeveral branches of the military art. Here is likewiſe a foundery for cannon and bells, &c. with two churches, a good academy, a houſe of correction, an hoſpital for widows, and another for orphans. The inhabitants derive not their ſubſiſtence from the reſidence of the court, but carry on a conſiderable trade in woollen manufactures, as alſo in wood and beer; and, excluſive of the profits ariſing to them from agriculture, receive farther advantages from its being the thoroughfare from Leipzig to Upper Germany. Gotha ſuffered greatly by fire in the years 1207, 1545, 1632, 1646, and 1665; but the houſes deſtroyed here in the laſt of theſe years have been all rebuilt of ſtone, and of the ſame height. On a hill above the town ſtands the ducal reſidence, called Friedenſtein, which was begun in 1643, by duke Erneſt the Pious, on the ſite of the caſtle of Grimmenſtein, which, in 1567, was totally razed by Auguſtus I. elector of Saxony, who in conſequence of the ban iſſued againſt duke John Frederick II. had made himſelf maſter both of this place and the town. Friedenſtein has been fortified by permiſſion of Ferdinand III. In it is a well provided armoury, with a valuable library, a fine muſeum of natural curioſities, and one of the moſt valuable cabinets of medals in Europe: 13 miles SW. Erfurt. Long. 28. 17. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 46. N.

GOTHA, a river of Sweden, which runs from the Wenner Lake into the ſea, near Gotheburg.

GOTHEBURG, or Gothenburg, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſt Gothland, ſituated near the ſea, at the conflux of the Moldal and the Gotha, in a marſhy plain, almoſt ſurrounded with barren rocks, on the ſide of which part of the town is built, the other part is ſituated in a valley, interſected by canals; the whole about three miles in circumference, and regularly fortified. The harbour is between two chains of rocks, about two furlongs wide. Gotheborg was firſt built by Charles IX. in the iſland of Hiſſingen, in the year 1607; but this town, a few years after, being burned down, by Chriſtian IV. king of Denmark, the inhabitants were removed, in the reign of Guſtavus Adolphus, to the preſent ſpot. Charles IX. when he founded the former town, drew thither a great number of foreigners, by allowing them a free exerciſe of religion, and an exemption from duties on exports and imports for twenty years. Theſe privileges were confirmed to the new town. Gotheborg is a place of conſiderable trade, and, next to Stockholm, one of the moſt commercial in Sweden. An Eaſt India company was eſtabliſhed in the year 1731. In the year 1740, the herring fiſhery was firſt begun, which is very advantageous; as much as 600,000 barrels having ſome years been caught in the ſhort ſpace of three weeks: 40 miles S. Uddevalla. Long. 29. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 57. 42. N.

GOTHLAND, a country of Sweden, bounded on the north by Sweden Proper, on the eaſt and ſouth by the Baltic, and on the weſt by the Sound, the German Ocean, and Norway. This country is inhabited by a nation celebrated for their excurſions and invaſions of other countries, which had its origin from the Getæ, or Tartars of the Crimea. The Goths had kings of their own till the year 1132, when they were united to Sweden, in the perſon of Suercher. It is a pleaſant and fertile country, conſiſting of good arable and paſture land: it abounds in lakes and rivers, which abound in fiſh, foreſt, and mines. It contains 48 towns, and is divided into Eaſt Gothland, Weſt Gothland, and South Gothland.

GOTHLAND (Eaſt), a province of Sweden, bounded on the north by the provinces of Nericia and Sudermanland, on the eaſt by the Baltic, on the ſouth by Smaland, and on the weſt by the Wetter Lake, which ſeparates it from Weſt Gothland, about eighty miles in length, and ſeventy in breadth. This country was formerly governed by its particular kings and laws. It produces wheat, rye, barley, oats, peaſe, &c. in ſuch plenty as to ſupply the neighbouring provinces with theſe ſorts of grain. It has alſo many fine orchards, rich meadows, and paſtures, lakes, and rivers, abounding with variety of fiſh, extenſive foreſts, ſome of which are of oak and birch; profitable iron-mines and founderies, quarries of ſtone and marble; flatting-mills and other machines for the improvement of manufacture. The occupations of the inhabitants are agriculture, grazing, hunting, and fiſhing; and in ſome places they are employed in the mines. The principal towns are Nordkioping, Soderkioping, Linkioping, and Wadſtena.

GOTHLAND (South), a country of Sweden, divided into three provinces, Schonen, Halland, and Blekingen, which, from time immemorial have undergone many viciſſitudes and changes. Sometimes they were ſubject to the crown of Denmark, at other times they were recovered by the Swedes; but at length king Charles Guſtavus annexed them for ever to the Swediſh dominions, by the treaty of Roſchild, in the year 1658.

GOTHLAND (Weſt), a province of Sweden, bounded on the north by Warmeland, on the eaſt by Nericia, the Wetter Lake, and Smaland, on the ſouth by Smaland and Haland, and on the weſt by the Scaggerac; about 115 miles in length, and 15 in breadth. It was formerly an independent kingdom, governed by its own laws. The ſoil produces corn, vegetables, and fruit, with excellent paſtures, ſo that the inhabitants ſend cheeſe and butter to other provinces. The rivers, lakes, and ſea coaſt, abound with fiſh. Iron-works, alum-works, and paper-mills are erected in ſeveral places. The principal occupations of the inhabitants are agriculture, grazing, and fiſhing. The principal towns are Gotheborg, Wenneſborg, Lidkoping, and Falkioping.

GOTHLAND, or Gottland, an iſland of Sweden, in the Baltic, about 70 miles in length, and 25 in its greateſt breadth, formerly an independent kingdom, but now ſubject to the ſupreme court of juſtice at Stockholm. From its convenient ſituation, it has juſtly acquired the name of the Eye of the Baltic. The ſoil is fertile, and there are fine woods of oaks and pines, good paſtures, and profitable fiſheries on this iſland; large quarries of ſtone, particularly the famous Gottland ſtone, and a ſoft grey ſandy ſtone, which are exported to Stockholm and other places. Here are alſo found ſome curious ſpecies of ſtones, as ſtone corals, cornelians, agates, and beautiful petrefactions. In former times here were alſo fine marble quarries. Very good lime-ſtones, tar, deal-boards, beams, turneps, and an excellent breed of ſheep are exported from this iſland. Gottland is not infeſted with bears or wolves, but is ſufficiently ſtocked with deer, foxes, and hares, the inhabitants ſubſiſt by agriculture, grazing, fiſhing, working in the quarries, burning lime, and by ſeveral ſorts of mechanic trades, and navigation. The Gottland peaſants ſell none of their commodities to the inhabitants of the towns; but when a peaſant comes to a market town, the burgher to whom he applies finds him in all neceſſaries, and gives him money to enable him to pay his taxes. On the other hand, the peaſant delivers up to the burgher all the produce of his induſtry, without ſaying a word about the price; and thus both parties act according to the dictates of natural juſtice and equity. In the year 1361, Waldemar, king of Denmark, ravaged this iſland, and laid it waſte, but it ſtill remained ſubject to the crown of Sweden. Albert, king of Sweden, after an expenſive war, was obliged to mortgage it to the Knights of the Croſs, in Pruſſia, who, in conſideration of a ſum of money, delivered it up, in 1403, to queen Margaret, though with ſome reluctancy. King Erick, of Pomerania, after he was dethroned, withdrew to this iſland, where he remained for three years: and when Charles VIII. was preparing to drive him from Gottland, and make a conqueſt of it, in the year 1449, Erick made an offer of it to Chriſtian I. king of Denmark. It remained in the poſſeſſion of the Danes till the year 1645, when, by the treaty of Bromſebro, it was reſtored to Sweden. Wiſby is the capital. Long. 18. 6. to 19. 6. E. Greenwich. Lat. 56. 54. to 57. 56. N.

GOTTINGEN, or Goettingen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Calenberg, and principal town of a quarter, or diſtrict, to which it gives name, ſituated in an agreeable, ſpacious, and fertile valley, on a canal, or branch of the river Leine, which paſſes through, and divides it into the New Town and Marſch. It contains about 1000 houſes, and 8000 ſouls, the ſtreets are large and convenient, and paved on each ſide. Here are five pariſh churches, and one for Calviniſts. The Roman Catholics celebrate their ſervice in a private houſe. The town is governed by a provoſt, named by the ſovereign, burgomaſters, and a ſyndic, choſen by the regency, aſſiſted by a council. The principal ornament and advantage of Gottingen is the univerſity, founded in the year 1734, by George II. king of England, and conſecrated on the 17th of September, 1737, which univerſity, by the inexpreſſible attention and care of its firſt curator, baron Munchauſen, has acquired a very diſtinguiſhed reputation. Belonging to it is a large ſplendid church, with a peculiar paſtor, and to it likewiſe belong a new and ſtately ſtructure of ſtone, the ground floor of which ſerves as a hall for public lectures, and that above is the library, with a council chamber, and other apartments. This library, to which conſiderable additions are every year made, if conſidered with regard to the number, goodneſs, and value of its books, is one of the moſt capital libraries in Europe. It is called the Bulowcan, having received its origin from a collection of about 10,000 volumes, bequeathed by the baron Bulow for the public uſe, and by his heirs given to the univerſity. A royal ſociety of ſciences, founded in 1751, and a royal German ſociety, alſo form part of the univerſity. It has likewiſe a fine obſervatory, erected on a tower on the rampart, with a phyſic garden, and near it a handſome anatomical theatre of ingenious conſtruction, a ſchool for teaching midwifery, &c. The territory belonging to the town is very conſiderable: 22 miles NE. Caſſel, and 51 ESE. Paderborn. Long. 27. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 24. N.

GOUDA, or Tergouw, a city of Holland, ſituated on a branch of the Rhine, called Iſſel, where it receives the river Gouw, which gives it its name. It is the ſixth and laſt of the large cities which have a voice in the States of Holland; it was built in the year 1272, by Florent V. comte of Holland, who granted it great privileges; the foundations had been laid long before. In 1330, it belonged to the houſe of Blois, who built a caſtle; but, in the year 1398, it was reſtored to the comte of Holland, together with the lordſhip of Schoonoven; this caſtle was entirely demoliſhed by the citizens, in the year 1581. In the year 1438, it was entirely deſtroyed by fire, but afterwards rebuilt in a better manner; the grand market is in a triangular form, with a handſome townhouſe, built in 1449, ſtanding in the centre. The great church is one of the handſomeſt and largeſt in the country, and is particularly celebrated for its painted glaſs windows, ſuppoſed to be the fineſt of the kind in Europe, and preſerved with great care: the principal painters were Theodore and Walter Crabeth, both of this town. The Magiſtrates are, a grand bailey, who repreſents the authority of the ancient comtes of Holland, four burgomaſters, and ſeven echevins, choſen by the common council, which conſiſts of forty citizens. The ſituation of this place is very advantageous, on account of the ſluices and the canals, which are running ſtreams; it has alſo a convenient nient port on the Iſſel, and five gates. It cannot eaſily be beſieged, as they could open the ſluices and lay the country round under water; add to this, the breadth and depth of the ditches, ſo that the only approach is by the banks of the Iſſel, which are ſtrongly fortified. Its principal trade conſiſts in cordage, cheeſe and tobacco-pipes; there are boats which paſs regularly to Amſterdam, the Hague, Rotterdam, Utrecht, &c. Jaqueline, comteſſe of Holland, in the war with the duke of Burgundy, made this the chief place of her reſidence: 9 miles NE. Rotterdam, and 22 S. Amſterdam. Long. 22. 7. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 1 N.

GRAIN COAST, or Malaguetta, or Pepper Coaſt, a country of Guinea, bounded by the Sierra Leona country, which lies to the weſt, and the Ivory Coaſt, on the ſouth-eaſt, extending along the Atlantic, about 100 leagues. The climate is ſaid to be unwholeſome, eſpecially to Europeans. The productions are peas, beans, gourds, lemons, oranges, and a kind of nut, with an exceedingly thick ſhell, a moſt delicious fruit, for which neither Europeans or natives have a name. The palm wine and dates of this country, are in the greateſt eſteem. Cows, hogs, ſheep, and goats are alſo in great plenty ; but what conſtitutes the chief wealth of the Grain Coaſt, is the abundance of Guinea pepper, or grains of Paradiſe, it produces, called Malaguetta by the Portugueſe, which draws a great trade, not only with all the neighbouring interior nations, but with the Europeans alſo. The natives of this diviſion are guilty of no exceſſes in eating or drinking, or indeed of intemperance in any kind of luxury. They admit the Europeans into all familiarities with their women ; and even invite them to love-banquets with their own wives and daughters. One quality they have in common with all other negroes, which is, a propenſity to ſteal whatever they come near, eſpecially from ſtrangers and foreigners, though they never omit the opportunity. Their taba, taba ſeyle, or, as others call him, tabo ſeil, or king, exerts an arbitrary power, and deſpotic authority over his ſubjects, and never appears abroad but with the utmoſt pomp and magnificence. His people raiſe his power by certain implicit ſentiments of a natural ſubmiſſion, and the awe with which they would regard a ſuperior being. Their ignorance attaches them to paganiſm ; but natural reaſon dictates a future ſtate. They welcome the new moon with ſongs, dancing, and diverſions of every kind ; and their ſuperſtitious regard for ſorcerers is extreme. The ſole employment of many of the negroes of this country is fiſhing, and every morning preſents large fleets of canoes, ranged along the ſhore, upon this buſineſs. Their common method of fiſhing is by a hand-line, and a hook, which they ſeldom draw empty out of the water. The Portugueſe had formerly the whole of the commerce of this coaſt, but the great advantages having excited the emulation of the Engliſh and Dutch, in the year 1664, their power began to give way to the more warlike and commercial ſpirit of theſe rivals. They loſt gradually all their ſettlements, and being forced to retire into the interior countries, reſolved, as the laſt effort, to unite themſelves with the natives by marriage ; whence ſprung that mixed progeny of mulattoes, more numerous here than in any part of Guinea. From policy, and, perhaps, from natural affection, the Portugueſe entruſted them with the care of the ſmall remnant of trade they now have, gave them the appellation of hidalgos, or gentlemen, reconciled them to the church of Chriſt, nay, even admitted them into holy orders, and rendered them uſeful in propagating Chriſtianity and the goſpel.

GRAVE, a ſtrong town or city of Brabant, belonging to the Dutch, ſituated in a marſhy country, on the ſouth ſide of the Meuſe. Before the year 1323, it was a freehold belonging to Otho, the lord of Cuyck and Heverlé, who delivered it that year into the hands of John III. duke of Brabant, with power to hold as a fief according to the cuſtoms of Brabant. It had a fortreſs more ancient than the town itſelf, where the lords of Cuyck made their ordinary reſidences, but that has been deſtroyed ſome years, and the fortifications of the town much augmented. The Brabanters and the Gueldrians, both pretended that this city was in their juriſdiction, and the former ſolicited the Duke, their ſovereign, at his inauguration, to take an oath that he would never give up his claims to it;

this oath is found in the 49th article of the Joyeuſe Entrée. In the year 1386, at a congreſs of peace held at Bois-le-Duc, between Philip the Bold, duke of Burgundy, and Jane, ducheſs of Brabant, on the one part, and William, duke of Juliers and Guelders on the other, it was agreed that it ſhould remain to Brabant. The prince of Parma having taken poſſeſſion of it againſt the revolters in 1586, it was beſieged by prince Maurice of Naſſau, the 18th of July, 1602; Antoine Gonzales commanded, and the admiral of Aragon made many attempts to ſuccour the place, but not being able to force the prince's camp, he retired, and the place ſurrendered the 19th of September. On the 28th of the ſame month, the prince was proclaimed lord of Cuyck, and the ſigniory was afterwards confirmed to the family of Naſſau by the treaty of Munſter, concluded in 1648. The French made themſelves maſters of it in the year 1672, in a very few days; but the prince of Orange, afterwards William III. king of England, retook it on the 26th of October, 1674, after it had been well defended by the marquis de Chamilli, who had a garriſon of 4000 men and 325 pieces of cannon: 20 miles E. Bois-le-Duc, and 34 SE. Utrecht. Long. 23. 16. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 46. N.—This town was taken by the troops of the French republic, on the 27th of December, 1794.

GRAVELINES, a ſea-port town of France, in the department of the North, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Bergues, ſituated on the Engliſh Channel, at the mouth of the river Aa, built in the year 1160, by Thierry, count of Flanders. It is not large, but well fortified, with baſtions, half moons, and horn-work. The country near it is interſected by canals, one of which goes to Dunkirk, by Bourbourg, and another directly to Bergues. In the year 1384, this place was ruined by the Engliſh, under the command of Henry Spencer, biſhop of Norwich, but was re-eſtabliſhed in the year 1405, when the ſtates of Flanders intreated John, duke of Burgundy, to unite it inſeparably to his own dominions. The army of France was defeated the 14th July, 1458, by that of Spain. In the year 1644, it was taken by the duke of Orleans, uncle to Louis XIV. In the year 1652, it was retaken by the Spaniards. In 1658, it was attacked by the army of France, and ſurrendered after a ſiege of five days. Since that time it has remained with France, to which it was ceded by the peace of the Pyrenées: 3 leagues WSW. Dunkirk, and 13 NW. Lille. Long. 19. 47. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 59. N.

GRAVESEND, a town of England, in the county of Kent, on the ſouth ſide of the Thames, and the firſt port on that river. In the time of Richard II. this town was taken and burned by the French and Spaniards, on which account, perhaps, as a compenſation, the inhabitants, with thoſe of Milton, obtained the excluſive privilege of conveying paſſengers from thence to London, on condition that they ſhould provide boats on purpoſe, and carry all perſons, either at two-pence per head, with his bundle, or the whole boat's fare ſhould be four ſhillings. This charter has been confirmed by ſucceeding princes, and under proper regulations they ſtill enjoy this advantageous privilege. The fare is now nine-pence each paſſenger. The boats are large and commodious, and much improved within theſe few years; they are obliged to depart on the ringing of a bell a quarter of an hour; they go to London with every flood, and return from Billingſgate on the like ſignal with every ebb. For its better ſecurity, Henry VIII. raiſed a platform of guns to the eaſt of the town, and erected a fort directly oppoſite, at Tilbury, on the Eſſex ſhore, which is a regular fortification, has a battery commanding the river, mounted with above 100 pieces of cannon, carrying balls from 24 to 46 pounds weight. Queen Elizabeth ordered the lord mayor of London, the aldermen, and all the companies, to receive all eminent ſtrangers and ambaſſadors at Graveſend, in their formalities; and attend them to London in their barges, if they went by water; if they went by land, they were to meet them on horſeback, in their gowns, on Blackheath. In the year 1727, the church and great part of the town was conſumed by fire. Graveſend is a corporation town, and, together with Milton, governed by a mayor, jurats, and common-council men. The town-houſe, where all public buſineſs is tranſacted, was built in the year 1764. There are two markets weekly, Wedneſday and Saturday, and a fiſh-market every Sunday morning. All outward bound ſhips are obliged to caſt anchor before the town, till they have been examined by, and obtained proper clearances from ſearchers, appointed for that purpoſe, who have an office near the town quay: a centinel is alſo ſtationed at the block-houſe, below the town, to give notice by the firing of a muſket, when ſhips are coming up the river, who are obliged to receive on board officers from the cuſtoms, a number of which are conſtantly waiting here for that purpoſe. The gardens round this town are ſo rich, that they not only ſupply the ſhipping with every article of that kind, but ſend great quantities to London; the aſparagus in particular, is remarkably fine: 9 miles WNW. Rocheſter, and 22½ E. London. Lat. 51. 23. N.

GREENLAND, a country ſituated between the ſtraits of Davis and Frobiſher, and Iceland. The northern boundaries are yet unknown. Notwithſtanding the great cold, the country is tolerably fertile, and the ſea is well furniſhed with fiſh. The number of ſea wolves, ſea dogs, ſea cows, and whales, is incredible. Since the middle of the laſt century, the Danes have ſettled ſeveral colonies along the coaſt, as claiming the ſovereignty of the country, and have taken ſome pains to civiliſe the inhabitants. The Greenlanders of both ſexes are generally ſhort, or under the common ſize, but well proportioned, fat, and plump. Their faces are ſomewhat flat; their hair black and lank; and their complexion, from their ſordid manner of living, is of a browniſh red. It is very ſeldom that they are afflicted with epidemical diſeaſes, being ſtrangers to the ſmall-pox, &c. But the ſcurvy is the reigning diſtemper in this country; and their common remedy on this occaſion, beſides ſome other ſimples, is ſcurvy-graſs. Their clothing is made of the ſkins of rein-deer, the dog-fiſh, and of certain birds ſewed together, with the ſmall guts of the Canis Marinus. There is very little difference in the dreſs of the two ſexes; and both of them live in a very ſordid filthy manner. They have two ſorts of habitations, one of which ſerves for the winter, and the other for the ſummer ſeaſon. The winter dwellings are the largeſt, and it is generally the women's taſk to build them up againſt winter, or when they intend to make a long ſtay in any particular place. Theſe are of a ſquare form, and built with pebbles, or ſmall fragments of the rocks, and their interſtices are filled up with moſs, or peat. Theſe huts are very ſeldom more than two ells above the ſurface of the ground; the reſt of them being, for greater ſtability and defence from the wind and cold, ſunk into the earth. The roof is covered with turf; and the entrance into them is dug narrow, and winding under ground. One of theſe dwellings ſeldom exceeds twenty feet ſquare, and yet is often occupied by ſeven or eight families. Theſe habitations are ſo warm, that both men and women are generally ſtripped to the waiſt while they remain in them; but the ſtench occaſioned by the cloſe confinement of ſo many perſons is intolerable. The Greenlanders betake themſelves to theſe winter manſions in the month of October, and continue in them till the beginning of May. Their ſummer habitations are light tents, made of the ſmooth ſkins of the dog-fiſh. Their manner of dreſſing and eating their victuals is extremely diſguſtful. They prefer the blood of the dog-fiſh to any other beverage; but their uſual drink is water: however, they can drink a great deal of brandy, without being intoxicated. The occupation of the men is chiefly fiſhing and hunting, for which they have very curious tackle. The boats in which the men only row out to ſea, are made of very thin narrow boards, faſtened together with whale-bone, and covered with ſeal ſkins. Only one man goes out in one of theſe boats, who is half covered, and ſo ſecurely laced in, that the water cannot penetrate into the boat; and thus equipped, he will row ſixty or ſeventy miles in a day, though he has but one oar, which is ſix or ſeven feet long, and flat at both ends. Theſe boats are eaſily overſet, which they look upon as no great detriment, if the owner comes off with his life; and many of them are extremely dextrous in recovering the boat again when ſuch an accident happens. The Greenlanders are ſtrangers to trades, arts, and ſciences. They have no traffic among one another, and their commerce with foreigners is very inconſiderable. Their chief commodities are blubber and whalebone; the ſea-unicorn's horn; the ſkins of deer, foxes, and the dog-fiſh; which they exchange for neceſſaries in clothing, and all kinds of ordinary domeſtic utenſils. They neither uſe, nor have any knowledge of money; but they fix a certain value on iron. The Aborigines, or original inhabitants, who on the arrival of the Norwegians in this country, were ſavages, ſeem, by the little knowledge the latter had of them, to be of American extraction. The firſt that gave occaſion to the diſcovery of this land was one Gumbiorn, after whom it was viſited by Eric Roux, or Redhead, a Norwegian. In the year 1023, the Greenlanders became tributary to Olaf, king of Norway; and in 1024, Arnald, the firſt biſhop of Greenland, was conſecrated at Lund, in Sweden. After this, the inhabitants of Greenland increaſing in number, the colony was divided into the Eaſt and Weſt Greenland. The kings of Norway, alſo uſed from time to time, to ſend ſtadtholders, or governors, to Greenland. In the year 1256, the Greenlanders revolted againſt Magnus, king of Norway; but in 1261, by the aſſiſtance of Eric, king of Denmark, they were reduced to his obedience. In 1348, the black plague having ſwept away the greater part of the Norwegians, the intercourſe between Norway and Greenland was ſuſpended. The laſt biſhop ſent thither from Norway, was one Andreas, who ſailed for Greenland in the year 1406. But no account was received of him till about 1540, when the colony there was found to be ſtill exiſting. In the ſubſequent time, Greenland was in a manner quite forgotten. In the reign of king Chriſtian II. Walkendorf, archbiſhop of Drontheim, exerted himſelf in attempting to reſtore the communication between the two countries, but met with too many obſtacles to carry his point. Chriſtian III. ſent a party of men to Greenland; but theſe returned with the trifling excuſe, that they had not been able to find it. Frederic II. in 1578, diſpatched one Magus Henniſen, in queſt of Greenland; who, indeed, got ſight of the land at a diſtance, but the ice prevented his nearer approach. In the year 1576, Martin Frobiſher ſailed from England to Greenland; but as the ſeaſon was far advanced, he was alſo prevented from landing, by the ice. However, by queen Elizabeth's command, he made a ſecond voyage the following year, when he landed in Greenland. Thus ſtood the affairs of Greenland, till Hans Egede, miniſter of Vogen, in Norway, prompted by a laudable zeal to promote the knowledge of Chriſt among the ſavage Greenlanders, made ſome propoſals for renewing the intercourſe between Denmark and Norway, and Greenland, which had been diſcontinued for ſome centuries. Moſt of the friends and acquaintance of this worthy divine, when they heard of his project, looked upon it as a chimerical undertaking. However, in the year 1718, he reſigned his benefice in the ſouth part of Norway, and removed, with his wife and children, to Bergen. His propoſals did not meet with a favourable reception, either from the merchants or clergy of that city. He therefore went to Copenhagen, in 1719 and laid his plan before the king; who ſent an order to the magiſtracy of Bergen, to propoſe to the citizens the erecting of a Greenland company. This, after many difficulties, was at laſt effected in the year 1721, and a capital of 10,000 rixdollars was raiſed for that purpoſe. The new eſtabliſhed company fitted out three ſhips for Greenland; and the indefatigable Egede was ſent thither as miſſionary, and furniſhed with 300 guilders by the ſociety for propagating the goſpel, at Copenhagen. It was not without great danger and difficulty, that the ſingle ſhip which had the miſſionary on board, at length arrived off a place called Baal's-River, on the weſt ſide of Greenland, in latitude 64 degrees, and wintered on an iſland there. M. Egede, and forty men, who remained with him, immediately ſet about building a houſe, in which the natives readily lent them a helping hand. This new colony was, from year to year, carefully ſupplied with neceſſaries by the Company; but the trade carried on with Greenland, brought in no great profit. In the mean while, the miſſionary employed his time in learning the Greenland language; and by his liberality and ſweetneſs of manners, ſo endeared himſelf to the inhabitants, that the reſpect they ſhowed him in ſome particulars, far exceeded his wiſhes; for they entertained ſuch an exalted idea of his piety and virtue, that all the ſick flocked about him, imploring him to heal them, being perſuaded that his breathing on them would reſtore them to health. In 1731, a royal edict was publiſhed, enjoining all the king's ſubjects in Greenland to return home, and the colonies were thereby diſſolved. But M. Egede, being zealous for the ſalvation of the inhabitants, ſtaid behind, together with his family, and ſome others who choſe to follow his fortunes. In 1733, the Greenland trade was re-aſſumed with great vigour; and the king granted a penſion of 2000 rixdollars a year to the miſſionaries. In the year 1736, M. Egede returned to Denmark, after a reſidence of 15 years, which he had ſpent in a zealous endeavour to do good, and left behind him a great number of converts. The Greenland trade is carried on by the Copenhagen company, who ſend thither three or four ſhips every year: but the whale fiſhery on the coaſts ſeems to be the principal object worth attending to, for which purpoſe, a great number of veſſels are ſent out every year, from the ports of Great Britain, and other European ſtates.

GREENWICH, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Rhode Iſland : 11 miles S. Providence.

GREENWICH, a town of England, in the county of Kent, ſituated on the banks of the Thames, anciently called Eaſt Greenwich. It formerly belonged to the abbot of Ghent from which it was ſeized by Henry V. and given to Shene ; at the diſſolution it came to the crown. Here was formerly a palace, in which queen Mary and queen Elizabeth were born, and Edward VI. died. This palace was firſt erected by Humphry, duke of Glouceſter, enlarged by Henry VII. and compleated by Henry VIII. ; but being afterwards ſuffered to run to ruin, was pulled down by king Charles II. who began another, a moſt magnificent edifice, and lived to ſee the firſt wing finiſhed. King Charles II. alſo enlarged the park, walled it round, planted it, and cauſed a royal obſervatory to be erected on the top of the ſteep of the hill. This edifice was erected for the uſe of the celebrated Mr. Flamſteed, and it ſtill retains the name of that great aſtronomer : it was likewiſe furniſhed with mathematical inſtruments for aſtronomical obſervations, and a deep dry well for obſerving the ſtars in the day time, on which account Greenwich is made the meridian of longitude by moſt Engliſh navigators. Greenwich is ſaid to contain 1350 houſes. Its pariſh church, which has been lately rebuilt by the commiſſioners for erecting the fifty new churches, is a very handſome ſtructure, dedicated to St. Alphage, archbiſhop of Canterbury, who is ſaid to have been ſlain by the Danes, in the year 1012, on the ſpot where the church now ſtands. The Thames is here very broad, and the channel very deep ; and at ſome very high tides the water is ſalt, though it is uſually ſweet and freſh. Greenwich Hoſpital ſtands on the ſpot where ſtood the palace of ſeveral of our kings. The firſt wing of this noble and ſuperb edifice, erected by king Charles II. was deſigned to be applied to the ſame uſe. William III. erected another wing, and adopted the plan of applying it to the uſe of Engliſh ſeamen incapable of ſervice either through age or infirmity, but the whole was not finiſhed till the reign of George II. Beſides the ſeamen who are provided for, there are 140 boys, the ſons of ſeamen, inſtructed in navigation, and bred up for the ſervice of the royal navy ; but there are no out-penſioners as at Chelſea. Each of the mariners has a weekly allowance of ſeven loaves, weighing ſixteen ounces each ; three pounds of beef ; two of mutton ; a pint of peas : a pound and a quarter of cheeſe : two ounces of butter ; fourteen quarts of beer, and one ſhilling a week tobacco money : the tobacco money of boatſwains is 2s. 6d. a week each, and that of their mates 1s. 6d. and the other officers in proportion to their rank. Beſides which, each common penſioner receives once in two years a ſuit of blue cloaths, a hat, three pair of ſtockings, two pair of ſhoes, five neck-cloths, three ſhirts, and two night-caps. This hoſpital has about 100 governors compoſed of the nobility, great officers of ſtate, and perſons in high poſts. For the better ſupport of this hoſpital, every ſeaman in the royal navy, and in the ſervice of the merchants, pays 6d. every month. This is ſtopped out of the pay of all ſailors, and delivered in the Sixpenny Receiver's Office, Tower Hill : and, therefore, a ſeaman who can produce an authentic certificate of his being diſabled and rendered unfit for the ſea ſervice, by defending any ſhip belonging to the Britiſh ſubjects, or in taking any ſhip from the enemy, may be admitted into this hoſpital, and receive the ſame benefit from it as if he had been in the king's ſervice. Greenwich is ſaid to be exceedingly populous, and to contain upwards of thirteen hundred houſes, and has two markets weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday. In the year 1779, a fire broke out in the ſouth-eaſt wing of the hoſpital, and deſtroyed eight wards, with the beautiful chapel : 5 miles E. London.

GREITZ, or Graitz, or Grewitz, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in the Vogtland, with ſome ſtuff manufactures, ſituated on a ſmall river which runs into the Elſter. It contains about 450 houſes : 10 miles NNE. Plauen, and 12 SW. Zwickau.

GREKSAKER, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſtmanland : 48 miles W. Stroemſholm.

GREMSA, one of the ſmaller Orkney Iſlands, between Pamona and Hoy.

GRENADA, or Granada, ſometimes called Upper Andaluſia, a province of Spain, bounded on the north by New Caſtile, on the eaſt by Murcia, on the ſouth by the Mediterranean, and on the weſt by Andaluſia, about 170 miles in length, and from 20 to 90 in breadth. As this country lies oppoſite to Africa, and the coaſt is much expoſed to the ravages of corſairs, a great number of towers and forts are erected along the coaſts. This province is one of the moſt healthy and moſt temperate in Spain, and ſo fertile, as ſcarcely to ſtand in need of human induſtry and culture ; rivers, brooks, and ſprings are innumerable. When in the poſſeſſion of the Moors, it was one of the moſt populous and rich countries in the world ; at preſent it is not ſo. However, generally ſpeaking, the land produces corn, wine, oil, ſugar, flax, and hemp. The mountains and the plains produce great variety of excellent fruit, pomegranates, citrons, oranges, olives, capers, figs, and almonds ; mulberry-trees grow in abundance, by which means, great quantities of ſilk are produced. In the foreſts are collected gall nuts, of uſe in the preparation of leather, and dying in general. The acorns of the country, beſides being uſed for cattle, are of ſo delicate a taſte, as to be preferred to filberts ; the raiſins are of two kinds, namely, theſe dried by the ſun on the branches, called Paſſerillas del Sol, and the others, called Paſſerillas de Lexia, are dipped in ley, made with the aſhes of the burnt branches, and afterwards dried in the ſun. Honey and wax are abundant. In the mountains, near Antequera, a great deal of excellent ſalt is made, not by fire, but by the heat of the ſun, which is ſufficient for the evaporation of the moiſture. In ſeveral places are quarries of excellent ſtone for building, and in ſome places hyacinths and other precious ſtones are found. The inhabitants of the country, though greatly degenerated from the induſtry and vigilance of their forefathers, are ſtill the moſt laborious in the ſouthern parts of Spain. They are fond of commerce and agriculture ; they are of mild and poliſhed manners, and ſo ſober that they drink but little wine themſelves, and never give any to their children. This province firſt became a diſtinct kingdom in the thirteenth century, when the Mooriſh king Abenhud, who reſided at Cordova, having in the year 1236, loſt his life and crown in a battle againſt the Chriſtians ; his ſubjects and followers betook themſelves to Grenada, and choſe a new king, who made the city of Grenada his capital, and place of reſidence. This kingdom, which was the laſt of the Mooriſh, then contained thirty-two large towns, and ninety-ſeven ſmaller, and continued from the year 1236, to 1492, when Ferdinand the Catholic, reduced it, and annexed it to the crown of Caſtile. Grenada is the capital. The principal rivers are the Xenil and the Guadalentin.

GRENADA, a city of Spain and capital of a province of the ſame name, ſaid to have been founded two thouſand eight hundred years before Chriſt. It is ſituated at the foot of the Sierra Nevada, or ſnowy mountains on two hills which are ſeparated by a river called Darro, which ſoon after joins the Xenil, that paſſes by the walls of the town. It is divided into four quarters, of which, the principal bears the name of Grenada, and is inhabited by the nobility, clergy, and the richeſt of the citizens, with many public and private buildings. In this part is the cathedral, not remarkable for its extent, but for its beautiful dome ; ſeveral of the kings and queens lie buried in this church. The ſecond quarter is that of Albambra, which is inhabited by deſcendants from the ancient Moors. Here are two palaces, one built in the year 1280, by the ſecond king of the Moors ; the remains of which bear evidence of its wonderful magnificence ; the other palace was built by Charles V. A little above the Alhambra, is another beautiful palace called Ginaraliph, or Xeneraliſe, built by a Mooriſh prince, from the balconies of which is ſaid to be one of the moſt beautiful proſpects in Europe, over the fertile plains of Grenada, terminated by mountains, whoſe tops are covered with ſnow. The third quarter is called Albaycin, anciently a fauxbourg, built by the Arabians. It ſtands on two hills, and contains near 1000 houſes, chiefly inhabited by the deſcendants of the Moors. The fourth is called Antequeruela, chiefly inhabited by people from Antequera, who are almoſt wholly employed in the different manufactures of ſilk, which conſtitutes the principal commerce of the place. The ſtreets of Grenada are narrow, irregular, and badly paved ; none of the houſes deſerve the name of palaces. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and contains 24 pariſh churches, 38 convents of both ſexes, 13 hoſpitals, an univerſity, an amphitheatre for bull fights, a tribunal of inquiſition, and about 90,000 ſouls. The country lying round about the city, and eſpecially that which extends to the ſouth and the weſt, is called La Vega de Grenada, or the Orchard of Grenada, from its fertility, and is full of pleaſant towns and villages. Grenada had formerly 20 gates, 12 of which only now remain. The Moors have left more monuments in Grenada than in any other city of Spain ; and, amongſt the loſſes which they ſuſtained in that country, are ſaid to regret nothing but Grenada ; they mention it in all their evening prayers, and ſupplicate Heaven to reſtore it to their poſſeſſion : 188 miles S. Madrid. Long. 13. 3. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 37. 17. N.

GRENADA, an iſland of the Weſt Indies, about 20 miles from north to ſouth, and 10 wide in the centre, but gradually narrowing towards each extremity, diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus, in the year 1498. A chain of mountains croſſes it from north to ſouth, in the centre of which is a large lake, from which ſeveral rivers take their riſe. Near the coaſt the ſoil is good, and produces indigo, ſugar, and tobacco, coffee, cocoa, and cotton ; game is abundant. Among the birds, the moſt common are, turtles and parroquets. The chief river fiſh are, eels, mullets, and cray-fiſh. Ten rivers run into the ſea towards the eaſt, three to the north, eight to the weſt, and five to the ſouth-eaſt, all ſufficient to drive ſugar-mills, and capable of becoming harbours for veſſels. The principal harbours are Port Louis and St. George. In the year 1658, the French attempted to form a ſettlement here, under an appearance of purchaſing land from the native Caribs. Diſputes ſoon aroſe between the Indians and the new comers, which ended in the deſtruction of the former, and the ruin of the colony ; ſo that Mr. Parquet, who had firſt undertaken the ſettlement, ſold it, in 1657, to count de Cerillac, at Paris, with all the veſſels, arms, &c. for 90,000 livres, or 30,000 crowns. The Count ſent ſuch a tyrannical brute to govern it, that the better ſort abandoned it, and the reſt who ſtayed behind, after ſeiſing him, ſhot him dead. Neverthelefs, in 1664, the Count ſold this iſland to the French Weſt India Company for 100,000 livres, though only 150 planters were left, out of 500 that were upon the iſland when he took poſſeſſion of it : and, in 1674, the company was obliged to give it up into the hands of the king. In the year 1714, things began to improve in Grenada. Veſſels from Martinico, in ſailing to the Spaniſh coaſt, touched at Grenada in their way, to take in proviſions. The trading privateers, who undertook this navigation, taught the people of that iſland the value of their ſoil, which only required cultivation. The execution of every project is facilitated by commerce. Some traders furniſhed the inhabitants with ſlaves, and utenſils to erect ſugar plantations. An open account was eſtabliſhed between the two colonies. Grenada was clearing its debts gradually by its rich produce, and the balance was on the point of being cloſed, when the war in 1744 interrupted the communication between the two iſlands, and at the ſame time ſtopped the progreſs of the ſugar plantations. This loſs was ſupplied by the culture of coffee, which was produced, during the hoſtilities, with all the activity and eagerneſs induſtry could inſpire. The peace of 1748 revived all the labours, and opened all the former ſources of wealth. In the year 1762, the iſland was taken by the Engliſh, and confirmed by the peace of 1763. Grenada contains about 80,000 acres of land, of which upwards of 70,000 paid taxes in the year 1776 ; the exports of that year, together with thoſe of the little iſlands dependent on it, were upwards of 23,000,000 pounds of ſugar, 818,700 gallons of rum, 1,827,166 pounds of coffee, 457,719 pounds of cacao, 91,943 pounds of cotton, and 27,638 pounds of indigo. In the year 1779, Grenada was taken by the French, but reſtored to the Engliſh by the peace of 1783. In the year 1771, the number of white people on the iſland was more than 1600 ; in 1777, they were leſs than 1300 ; and in the year 1793, hardly 1000. In the year 1787, the exports were, 175,548 cwt. of ſugar, 670,000 gallons of rum, 8800 cwt. of coffee, 2700 cwt. of cacao, 2,000,000 pounds of cotton, and 2800 pounds of indigo, beſides miſcellaneous articles to the value of 64,545l. ſterling, amounting, in the whole, to upwards of 600,000l. ſterling, at the London prices. Long. 61. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 12. 10. N.—In the month of December, 1795, this iſland was taken by the French ; in the month of June, 1796, it was retaken by the Britiſh, under general Abercrombie.

GRENADA, a town of North America, in the province of Nicaragua, ſituated on the Lake of Nicaragua, by which means it has a communication with the Pacific Ocean and the Caribbean Sea. Its commerce is conſiderable in indigo, cochineal, hides, and ſugar. In the year 1680, it was taken and burned by the Engliſh and French freebooters : 50 miles SSE. Leon. Long. 69. W. GRENADA (New), a province of South America, placed in the Spaniſh government of Terra Firma, and called the New Kingdom of Grenada ; bounded on the north by the provinces of St. Martha and Venezuela, on the ſouth-eaſt by Guiana, on the ſouth by countries unknown, and on the weſt by the provinces of Carthagena and Popayan ; firſt diſcovered in the year 1536. Ferdinand de Lugo, admiral of the Canaries, ſent Gonzalo Ximenes de Queſada, his lieutenant, from St. Martha, to diſcover the country ſituated along the river Magdalena. Ximenes travelled by land along the left bank of that river, but met with great difficulties, on account of the thick woods and vaſt number of rivers, rapid ſtreams, and marſhes he had to croſs ; but principally on account of the frequent inroads of the natives. He came to a place named Tora, which he called Puebla de los Brachas, on account of four rivers that joined there. At this place he paſſed the winter, having travelled, as he reckoned, 150 leagues from the ſea-coaſt up the land. Next ſpring, he went up the banks of another river, till he came to the foot of a high mountain called Opon, fifty leagues broad, very ſteep and deſert : having paſſed theſe, he came into an even plain country, well cultivated, where they gathered a great deal of ſalt from certain ſalt-ſprings. Thence he came with his people into the province of a powerful Cacique Bogota, whom they defeated. They afterwards plundered the villages of the Indians, where they found ſtores of gold and emeralds. Thence they went into the country of the Panchos, ſeparated from that of Bogota by little hills, and entered into a valley which they called the Trumpet, fifteen leagues diſtant from a very high mountain, bare of trees, and from which the Indians got emeralds. While they ſtaid in that valley, they took an immenſe booty and abundance of gold. Three days' journey farther, they ſubdued two other Caciques : and being returned into the province of Bogota, they paſſed through the country of the Panchos, and obliged the greater number to make peace. Ximenes, judging that this country was now ſufficiently diſcovered and ſubdued, called it the New Kingdom of Grenada, becauſe he was a native of the province bearing that name in Old Spain, and built the city of St. Fé, which is the capital. The natives uſe maize, or the caſſava-root, inſtead of bread. They have plenty of ſalt, which they ſell to great profit in the neighbouring countries, particularly thoſe ſituated in the mountains, and along the river Magdalena. They have ſtore of game ; the lakes and rivers abound with fiſh. The natives are tall, and wear black, white, or variegated clokes, which they tie round the waiſt with a ſaſh. They adorn their heads with ſtrings of painted flowers, very ingeniouſly made of cotton. The country abounds with gold and ſilver mines, and produces plenty of corn and fruit ; and the inhabitants breed a number of horſes and mules, which they ſend to Peru.

GRENADE, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Upper Garonne : 4 leagues NNW. Toulouſe, and 6 SSE. Caſtel Saraſin. Long. 18. 58. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 45. N.

GRISONS, a people in alliance with the Swiſs, divided into three leagues, which form one republic. The country which they inhabit is bounded on the north by the canton of Glaris, and the counties of Sargans and Pludentz, on the eaſt by the Tyroleſe, on the ſouth by the ſtates of Venice, and the duchy of Milan, and on the weſt by the Swiſs Italian bailiwicks, and the canton of Uri. The whole country was known to the ancients by the name of Rhætia. Under this name likewiſe was compriſed a part of Swabia, and was diſtinguiſhed into Upper and Lower Rhœtia. This country was what conſtituted Upper Rhœtia, and, at the decline of the Roman empire, fell under the power of the Oſtrogoths, who governed it by dukes. Towards the ſixth century it paſſed under the dominion of the Franks, and in the ninth was united to Germany. The leagues, or alliances, were originally formed on account of the tyranny of the great barons. The moſt ancient began about the year 1400, and 1419, in the biſhopric of Coire, againſt the ſecular power of the biſhop, and took the name of The Caddee, or League of God's Houſe. The ſecond was formed in the year 1424, and was called the Griſe, or Gray League. The other was formed in the year 1436, which is the League of the Ten Juriſdictions. The two former entered into an alliance in the year 1425, and was joined by the laſt in the year 1471. This general confederation was renewed in the year 1544, and again in 1712. By this treaty of union, theſe people reciprocally engage, not to make any new alliance, nor declare war, nor make peace, but by common conſent. They agree to ſuccour each other at their own expence, guarantee each other's privileges, &c. Their government is perfectly democratic, ſubdivided into a great number of ſmall democracies totally independent of each other in their particular police. A diet, or aſſembly of the three leagues, is held yearly, compoſed of ſixty three deputies, and three chiefs, of which each league ſends its reſpective ſhare. In the election of theſe deputies, every male of ſixteen years of age has a voice, and in ſome communities they are allowed to vote at the age of fourteen. The country is, in general, very elevated and mountainous; it contains ſeveral vallies, to ſome of which the paſſages are ſhut up during great part of the year. Towards the ſouth lie the chief of theſe vallies, ſunk in the Alps, which at laſt terminate in inacceſſible glaciers, or elevated rocks, capable of affording no kind of vegetable whatever. From theſe glaciers the principal rivers take their ſource; as the Rhine, the Inn, and the Adda. The inhabitants cultivate ſome grain in the vallies, and the leſs ſteep hills, but not ſufficient for the wants of half the people, the reſt they obtain from Lombardy. Their principal object, as farmers, is the care of their ſheep and cattle, from which they obtain excellent butter and cheeſe. The mountains afford good paſture, the vallies produce fruit, and the hills cheſnuts. The principal part of the mountains abound in metals, minerals, foſſils, and mineral ſprings; ſalt is obtained from Tyrol: moſt of the Griſon peaſants wear woollen and linen cloth of their own manufacture. The number of inhabitants of the Three Leagues is eſtimated at 150,000 ſouls; and of their ſubject countries, the Valteline, Bormio, and Chiavenna, is 100,000. The inhabitants are partly Roman catholics, and partly Proteſtants; the peaſants ſpeak a corrupt Italian, but the German language is chiefly made uſe of in the towns, and in all public acts.

GRISTO, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in Anterior Pomerania: 1 mile WSW. Cammin.

GRISTOW, a ſmall iſland of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, ſituated in the Direnow, between the town of Cammin and the iſland of Wollin, in Anterior Pomerania.

GRODITZ, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 2½ miles NW. Ottmuchau.

GRODNO, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Wilna, ſituated on the river Niemen, partly on an eminence and partly on a plain, ſurrounded with hills. Near it is an old caſtle, in which the diets formerly aſſembled, but now fallen to decay, only one wing of it remaining, ſurrounded by a deep ditch, and communicating with the town by a bridge. Auguſtus III. built another, but did not live to inhabit it. In the year 1673, it was enacted that every third general diet, ſhould be held in this town, which has not been regularly obſerved. The Roman Catholics have nine churches, thoſe of the Greek church have two, and the Jews have a ſynagogue. The market place, and the principal ſtreet which leads to the caſtle, are paved, the other ſtreets in general are mean and dirty, and the houſes for the moſt part little better than cottages. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 7000, many of which are employed in manufactures of linen, woollen, cotton and ſilk. A medical academy was inſtituted here by the late king of Poland, for ſtudents in phyſic and ſurgery, at his own immediate expence; which, but for the late unfortunate troubles, bid fair to become of conſiderable conſequence to the country: 64 miles SSW. Wilna, 140 NE. Warſaw, and 140 SE. Konigſberg. Long. 41. 58. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 28. N.

GROINARD, a ſmall iſland of Scotland, near the weſt coaſt of the county of Roſs: 6 miles SE. Udrigil Head.

GROLL, a town of the United Dutch States, in the county of Zutphen, ſtrongly fortified, ſituated on the river Slinghe, whoſe waters fill the ditches round the fortifications. At the commencement of the revolt, it adhered firmly to the king of Spain. In the year 1593, the prince of Orange beſieged it, but was compelled to retire by general Mondragon, who arrived with ſome troops to relieve the place; it was, however, taken four years after, when the Spaniſh army was engaged in Picardy. The marquis of Spinola took it from the Dutch in 1605, who laid ſiege to it again in 1627, under the conduct of prince Frederick Henry, of Naſſau. Lambert Vereycken, who commanded the town, was obliged to ſurrender the 26th of Auguſt, after a month's attack, and after the comte de Bergh, who was advancing to his aſſiſtance, had been twice repulſed. William the natural ſon of Maurice, prince of Orange, and admiral of Holland, was killed at this ſiege. The important ſituation of the place, in the vicinage of Weſtphalia and the biſhopric of Munſter, induced the biſhop of the latter, aſſiſted with the troops of France, to beſiege it, in 1672; but the Hollanders retook it a ſhort time after: 19 miles E. Zutphen, and 19. SSW. Oldenſeel. Long. 24. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 8. N.

GRONHAUS, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein: 24 miles NE. Eutyn.

GRONINGEN, one of the United Dutch States, bounded on the north by the German Ocean, on the eaſt by Eaſt Frieſland and Germany, on the ſouth by Overiſſel, and on the weſt by Frieſland. It was formerly a burggraviat, or viſcounty, under the protection of the biſhop of Utrecht; as granted by the emperor, Henry III. The emperor, Maximilian, gave it, with all Frieſland, to Albert, duke of Saxony, to ſtop the progreſs of two factions, called Schyrings and Vetcoopers; but this rather increaſed than diminiſhed the diſorders. The inhabitants called in Edſard, count of Eaſt Frieſland, and put themſelves under his protection, but, in the year 1505, rebelled againſt him; who, in the year 1513, renounced all his rights to the duke of Guelders. In the year 1536, it was ceded to the emperor, Charles V. from whom it came to the houſe of Auſtria. It followed the example of the other provinces in throwing off the yoke of Spain, and, in the year 15 4, was incorporated into the States General, where it holds the ſeventh rank. Groningen is the capital.

GRONINGEN, a city, and capital, of the ſtate of Groningen; large, rich, ſtrong, well peopled, and adorned with many excellent buildings, public and private; its figure is nearly round, encompaſſed with good ramparts, guarded by large ditches filled with water, beſides many baſtions and other fortifications, which would render an attack upon it very difficult. Its port is very commodious, into which ſhips enter with great eaſe by means of a canal, whoſe ſides are lined with large ſtones, about three leagues from the ſea. It is watered by the river Hunes, which runs through it to the ſea northward; the Dunſter runs eaſtward from it into the river Ems. This city has often ſuffered from the calamities of war; in the year 1500, Albert, duke of Saxony, laid ſiege to it, but being wounded, he was obliged to retire, and died a ſhort time after, at Embden; and peace was concluded by the mediation of the biſhop of Utrecht: not long after, the inhabitants of Groningen broke the peace, and ſeized on Damme; Edſard, comte of Eaſt Frieſland, reinforced by ſome troops of the biſhop of Munſter and Utrecht and of the duke of Brunſwick, came to an engagement with them, and put them to the rout, with the loſs of a thouſand citizens and a thouſand ſoldiers. Edſard then attacked the city of Groningen, which ſurrendered, in 1505, after a long ſiege, and built a citadel to keep the citizens in awe, which was pulled down in 1544. The Spaniards rebuilt it in the time of the revolt, with five baſtions, but the inhabitants deſtroyed their works after the peace of Ghent. In the year 1536, the citizens being deſirous of preſerving their privileges, called in the aſſiſtance of Charles V. to whom they ſubmitted. At the commencement of the revolt they would not receive a garriſon, nor enter into the famous union of Utrecht, which is the reaſon why this province is the laſt in rank of the United States. In the year 1576, Groningen aſſented to the union, and took the oath of fidelity. George de Lalain, comte de Rennebourg, took it by ſtratagem, on the 10th of June, 1579, for the king of Spain, and compelled colonel Schenck, who attempted to retake it in the following year, to raiſe the ſiege; but, in the year 1594, prince Maurice retook it, the 24th of July, after a ſiege of two months; the principal articles of the capitulation were, that the city and ſigniory of Groningen ſhould be reſtored to the United States, and that William, couſin-german to prince Maurice, ſhould be governor under the authority of the States. The biſhop of Munſter and elector of Cologne laid ſiege to it in 1672, with an army of 20,000 men, but after ſix weeks were compelled to retire, on the 27th of Auguſt, by the brave reſiſtance of general Charles Robenhaut, the governor, who commanded a garriſon of 2000 men; the citizens and the ſtudents ſignalized themſelves alſo very much in its defence. Groningen is by ſome ſaid to take its name from Grunnius, a commander of the Gauls; but by others, with more probability, from the excellent green paſtures by which it is every way ſurrounded. The city is governed by four burgomaſters, and a common council of twelve, who are ſovereign judges, without appeal; beſides a chamber of juſtice called Oudermans, for the inhabitants of the country about Groningen, compoſed of the principal citizens. An univerſity was eſtabliſhed here in 1614, and endowed with the revenues of ſeveral monaſteries. Ubbo Emmius, the celebrated hiſtoriographer of Frieſland, was the firſt rector. Groningen was anciently a free and imperial city: in the year 1559, it was erected into a biſhopric, under the archbiſhop of Utrecht, by pope Paul IV. at the inſtance of Philip II. king of Spain, but had only three biſhops before the revolution and conſequent diſſolution: 81 miles W. GUADALOUPE, or Guadaloup, an iſland of the Weſt Indies, and one of the largeſt of thoſe called the Leeward Iſlands; about 250 miles in circumference. It is repreſented as divided into two parts by a channel, about a league and a half over, called the Salt River, navigable only for canoes, which runs north and ſouth, and communicates with the ſea on both by a large bay at each end, of which that on the north is called Grand Cul de Sac; and that on the ſouth Petit Cul de Sac. The eaſt part of the iſland is called Grande Terre, and is about nineteen leagues from Antigua point, on the north-weſt, to the point of Guadaloupe, on the ſouth-eaſt; and about nine leagues and a half in the middle, where broadeſt: this part is about forty leagues in circumference. The weſt part, which is properly Guadaloupe, according to Laet, is ſubdivided by a ridge of mountains into Capes-terre on the weſt, and Baſſe-terre on the eaſt. This is twelve leagues from north to ſouth, and ſeven and a half where broadeſt; and about forty leagues in circuit. Both parts would be joined by an iſthmus a league and a half in breadth, were it not cut through by the river. Labat ſays that the French were obliged to abandon Grand-terre in 1696, by reaſon of the frequent incurſions and depredations committed there by the Engliſh from Antigua and Montſerrat. Beſides, this part is deſtitute of freſh water, which is ſo plentiful in the other (properly called Guadaloupe, as having been firſt diſcovered and inhabited) that it has enough to ſupply the neighbouring iſlands. He makes the latter thirty five leagues in compaſs, and both iſlands together about ninety. The ſalt-river, he ſays, is about fifty toiſes, or 300 feet, over at its mouth, towards the Great Cul de Sac, from whence it grows narrower, ſo that in ſome places it is not above ninety feet over. Its depth is likewiſe as unequal as its breadth, for in ſome places it will carry a ſhip of 500 tons, and in others hardly bear a veſſel of fifty. It is a ſmooth, clear ſtream, above two leagues from the one Cul de Sac to the other, and finely ſhaded for the moſt part with mangroves. The air here is very clear and healthy, and not ſo hot as in Martinico. Here is alſo plenty of water, and as good as the ſoil is rich, which laſt is not inferior to that of Martinico; it is equally cultivated, and its produce is the ſame with that of Martinico. The French began to ſend colonies to Guadaloupe about the year 1632. But it made no great figure till the preſent century, ſince the beginning of which it has vaſtly increaſed : and the French have fortified it with ſeveral regular forts. This iſland was firſt diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus, who gave it the name it now bears, from the reſemblance it was ſuppoſed to have to the mountain ſo called in Old Spain. His landing was oppoſed by the women of the iſland with their bows and arrows, but they were ſoon diſperſed by the fire arms of the Spaniards, who obtained an eaſy poſſeſſion of the iſland. They found the houſes ſtored with large quantities of cotton, ſpun and unſpun, and looms for weaving it; mention is likewiſe made of iron bows and arrows, and cotton hammocs. Among the vegetable productions are the tree which yields the copayba balſam; the milk-ſhrub, which yields a balſamic liquor like milk; the moubane tree, which bears a yellow plumb, uſed by the natives to fatten their hogs; the corbary-tree, which bears a gum ſimilar to amber; a kind of cinnamon-tree, aloes, and ſandal-wood; indigo, cacao, coffee and cotton. Among the birds diſcovered in the iſland were parrots, partridges, turtle-doves, herons, and falcons, but the moſt extraordinary is that called the devil-bird; it is a fiſhing bird of paſſage, of the ſize of a young pullet, with a plumage jet black. The bees are black, ſmall, and without ſting, the honey never hardens, but is always of the conſiſtence of oil. A ſtinking inſect, called ravet, is very troubleſome in this iſland, gnawing paper, books and furniture, and would be intolerable were it not for a large ſpider, which entangles them in their web, and otherwiſe deſtroys them. On a very lofty mountain is a conſiderable volcano, it is called the ſulphur mountain. In the year 1775, the exports of Guadaloupe were 188,386 quintals of ſugar, 63,029 of coffee, 1438 of indigo, 1024 cacao, and 5193 of cotton, beſides hides and other articles, and without including the barter with Martinico, and other iſlands. In the year 1759, Guadaloupe was taken by the Engliſh, and reſtored at the peace in 1763. Long. 43. 24. to 54. 15. W. Ferro. Lat. 15. 55. to 16. 37. N.—In the month of April, 1794, this iſland was taken by the Britiſh troops, but evacuated again in the month of February, 1795.

GUAM, or Guahan, one of the Mariana, or Ladrone Iſlands, in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, about 30 leagues in circumference. The iſland is fertile, with ſeveral good harbours, and a great number of ſmall freſh water rivers. The Spaniards have a town, of which the houſes are built with ſtone, and defended by two forts and a garriſon of 100 men. There are ſeveral other villages, ſome of which contain about 130 houſes, and the number of inhabitants in the whole iſland is eſtimated at 30,000. The natives go naked, and never bury their dead, but leave them expoſed to the air. Long. 161. E. Ferro. Lat. 13. 25. N.

GUAMALIES, a diſtrict of Peru, in the archbiſhopric of Lima, ſituated in the centre of the Cordiilera, conſequently its air is very different. This juriſdiction begins 80 leagues NE. of Lima, and its ſituation being rather cold than temperate, few places are fertile in its whole extent, which is above 40 leagues. The Indian inhabitants of the town apply themſelves to weaving, and make a great variety of baizes, ſerges, and other ſtuffs, with which they carry on a very conſiderable trade with the other provinces, deſtitute of ſuch manufactures.

GUAMANGA, a juriſdiction of Peru, in a biſhopric of the ſame name. The ſoil is fertile in grain and fruit. The principal articles of commerce are cattle, hides, and ſweetmeats.

GUAMANGA, a town of South America, in Peru, the ſee of a biſhop, whoſe dioceſe extends over ſeveral diſtricts. The town was founded in the year 1539, by Francis Pizarro, on the ruins of an Indian village. The Spaniards added the name of San Juan del la Victoria, in memory of the precipitate retreat of Manco, the ynca, from Pizarro, who offered him battle. This city was founded for the conveniency of the trade carried on between Lima and Cuſco; for during this long diſtance, there was at that time no town, whence the travellers frequently ſuffered by the incurſions of Manco's army. This gave occaſion to building the city on the ſpot where the Indian village ſtood, though extremely inconvenient with regard to proviſions, as lying contiguous to the great chain of the Andes; but the war being happily terminated by the entire defeat of Manco's party, the city was removed to its preſent ſituation. There are three parochial churches, one for Spaniards, and two for Indians, beſides the cathedral, and ſeveral other churches and convents. Among the inhabitants are twenty noble families, who live in a quarter of the town ſeparated from the reſt. In it is an univerſity, which enjoys a great revenue, for the ſtudy of philoſophy, divinity, and law. Long. 60. 10. W. Ferro. Lat. 12. 50. N.

GUANCA VELICA, a town of South America, and capital of a diſtrict of the ſame name: 50 leagues SSE. Lima.

GUANCA VELICA, or Huanca Velica, a juriſdiction of South America, in the biſhopric of Guamanga, in Peru. The town which gives name to this government, was founded on account of the famous rich quickſilver mine; and to the working of it, the inhabitants owe their whole ſubſiſtence; the coldneſs of the air checking the growth of all kinds of grain and fruits, ſo that they are obliged to purchaſe them from their neighbours. This town is noted for a water where ſuch large petrifications are formed, that the inhabitants uſe them in building houſes, and other works. The quickſilver mines wrought here ſupply with that neceſſary mineral, all the ſilver mines of Peru; and notwithſtanding the prodigious quantities already extracted, no diminution is perceived. This mine, in the year 1779, was a hundred and ſeventy fathom in circumference, and 480 deep, and the mercury is ſent from hence into all the provinces in which they work mines: the quantity, in 1763, was 5241 quintals, by which 524,100 pounds weight of ſilver were produced.

GUANUCO, a town of South America, in Peru, and capital of a juriſdiction, diction, which begins 40 leagues north-eaſt of Lima. This city was formerly one of the principal in theſe kingdoms, and the ſettlement of ſome of the firſt conquerors; but at preſent in ſo ruinous a condition that the principal houſes where theſe great men lived remain as it were only monuments of its former opulence. The other parts of it can hardly be compared to an Indian town. The temperature of the air in the greateſt part of its territories is very pure and mild, and the ſoil fruitful. Several kind of ſweetmeats and jellies are made here, and ſold to other provinces.

GUARCHIRI, a juriſdiction of South America, in Peru. This province begins in the mountains, about ſix leagues eaſt of Lima. From the diſpoſition of its parts, thoſe places only which lie in the valley, and in the breaches of the mountains, are inhabited; and theſe are very fertile, producing great quantities of fruit, wheat, barley, maize, and other grain. In its mountains are ſeveral ſilver mines, though but few of them are wrought, being none of the richeſt.

The ſoil is fertile, and the country abounds in corn, cattle, cochineal, honey, wax, ſugar, cotton, and indigo, the laſt article ſuppoſed to be the beſt that is produced in the Spaniſh dominions. It is mountainous, with numerous volcanos, and ſubject to earthquakes.

GUATIMALA, or St. Jago de Guatimala, a town of Mexico, and capital of a province and audience, which includes eight provinces. It was at firſt ſituated in a valley about a league wide, but opening gradually toward the South Sea, between two mountains, and containing 7000 families. This town was deſtroyed by an earthquake in 1751. The town was rebuilt at a little diſtance, which was again deſtroyed in 1772. Since that time its ſituation has been removed to the diſtance of eight leagues. The audience is compoſed of a governor, preſidence, and counſellors. Long. 74. 54. W. Ferro. Lat. 14. 28. N.

GUATIMAR, a town of the iſland of Cuba: 50 miles NNE. St. Jago.

GUAYAQUI , a juriſdiction of South America, in the audience of Quito, near the Pacific Ocean. During the winter months, from December to April or May, the elements, the inſects, and the vermin ſeem to have joined in a league to incommode the human ſpecies. The heat appears in the middle of winter to be greater than at Carthagena. The rains alſo continue day and night, accompanied with frequent and dreadful tempeſts of thunder and lightning, ſo that every thing ſeems to conſpire to diſtreſs the inhabitants. The river, and all thoſe which join it, overflow their banks, and lay under water the whole country. The long calm renders the refreſhing winds very deſirable; and the innumerable ſwarms of inſects and vermin infeſt both the air and ground in an intolerable manner. The ſnakes, poiſonous vipers, ſcorpions, and ſcolopendræ, in this ſeaſon find methods of getting into the houſes, to the deſtruction of many of the inhabitants: and though they are not actually free from them all the reſt of the year, yet at this time they are far more numerous, and alſo more active; ſo that it is abſolutely neceſſary to examine carefully the beds, ſome of theſe animals having been known to find their way into them; and both as a ſafeguard againſt the danger, and to avoid the tortures of the moſcitos and other inſects, all perſons, even the Negro ſlaves and Indians have toldos, or canopies, over their beds. The leaſt troubleſome ſeaſon is the ſummer, as then both the number and activity of theſe vermin are diminiſhed. Some tobacco is planted in this juriſdiction; but is not much eſteemed; the reſt of its products as wax, cotton, and pita, are barely ſufficient to ſupport its inhabitants, though they are far from being numerous; occaſioned by the general poverty which reigns through all its towns and villages. The country is full of foreſts of large trres, fit for building or repairing ſhips, among other trees are found the ceibo, which has a lofty trunk, thick buſhy branches, and round leaves, this tree produces a flower which forms a pod about two feet long, and an inch wide, which, when ripe and dry, opens and diſcovers a tuft of red woolly down as fine as ſilk. The principal town has the ſame name.

GUAYAQUIL, a ſeaport town of South America, in the audience of Quito, ſituated on a river near the Pacific Ocean, founded in the year 1533. The town is defended by three forts, two on the river, and one behind the town: 150 miles SSW. Quito, and 330 N. Truxillo. Long. 59. 20. W. Ferro. Lat. 2. 12. S.

GUELDERLAND (Duchy of), a country of Europe, bounded on the north by Overiſſel and the Zuyder Sea, on the eaſt by the biſhopric of Munſter and the duchy of Cleves, on the ſouth by the duchy of Juliers and Brabant, and on the weſt by the ſtates of Utrecht and Holland. It was erected into a county by the emperor Henry IV. and in the twelfth century one of the counts added Zutphen to his dominions. Henry of Naſſau added the country of Veluwe. Otto III. included Nimeguen and its territory. In the year 1339, Guelderland was erected into a duchy, by Louis of Bavaria, and paſſed to different families, to that of Juliers, Egmont, and at length to the dukes of Burgundy. In the year 1579, what now forms the preſent ſtate of Guelderland, that is, the quarters of Nimmeguen, Zutphen, and Arnheim, acceded to the union of Utrecht, each of theſe quarters has its particular ſtates, compoſed of the nobility and the towns, and theſe two claſſes have equally a right to make propoſitions relative to government. Every nobleman is admitted at the age of twenty-two. Notwithſtanding the number of towns poſſeſſed of the right of ſummoning, yet may the co-regents alſo depute as many as they pleaſe to aſſiſt at the diet of the diſtrict. Each town, however, has but one vote. The aſſemblies of the ſtate of each diſtrict are always held in the capital, from which it derives its name, and the burgomaſter, for the time being, ſits as preſident of the diet, at which all affairs relative to the particular economy of that diſtrict, or quarter, are deliberated. Two general aſſemblies likewiſe of the ſtates of the whole province, conſiſting of the deputies of the eſtates of the three provinces are annually held in the three capitals, viz. one in ſpring, and the other in autumn. Theſe deputies are ſtyled the ſtates of the principality of Guelderland, and the county of Zutphen. In theſe aſſemblies all matters relative to the whole province are regulated, and the burggrave of the diſtrict of Nimmeguen always ſits as preſident. To the aſſembly of the ſtates general of the United Provinces, Guelderland ſends nineteen deputies. The chief tribunal, with the chambers of accounts belonging to the province are kept at Arnhem. Some part of Guelderland, including the towns of Gueldres, Wachtendonk, Stralen, &c. and ſome villages were ceded to Pruſſia by the treaty of Utrecht, with the reſervation of the religious rights of the inhabitants. The town of Ruremond, with the territory round it, remained to Spain, and from thence came to the houſe of Auſtria.

GUELDRES, a town of the duchy of Guelderland, ceded, with a conſiderable diſtrict, to Pruſſia. It is advantageouſly ſituated amidſt marſhes, on the river Niers, whoſe waters fill the ditches, and was formerly ſo ſtrongly fortified as hardly to be taken except by famine. It had a caſtle, built by Wichard du Pont, the firſt lord of the place, in which the ſovereigns of the country firſt took up their abode. It anciently depended on the archbiſhopric of Cologne, but at preſent on the biſhop of Ruremond. In the year 1587, colonel Patton, a Scotchman, in the ſervice of the Dutch, in the abſence of colonel Schenck, ſold the city for 36,000 florins to the lord of Hautepenne, for the king of Spain, though provided with all ſorts of ſtores. The Dutch beſieged it three times, viz. in 1637, in 1639, and in 1640, but all to no purpoſe. The marquis of Brandenburg (king of Pruſſia) took it the 21ſt of December, 1702, after a blockade of eighteen months, and a bombardment for fourteen days, with thirty pieces of cannon, and thirty-four mortars; and by virtue of an article in the peace of Utrecht, concluded the 11th of April, 1713, between the kings of France and Pruſſia, it was agreed that Gueldres, with the country of Keſſel, and the bailiwick of Krieckenbeeck ſhould remain to Pruſſia, in exchange for the principality of Orange, which was annexed to France. This prince eſtabliſhed a court of judicature, conſiſting of ſeven counſellors, or magiſtrates, to judge the cauſes of all the country under his dominion. The fortifications have been razed. In the year 1794, it was taken by the French: 72 miles SE. Amſterdam, and 22 NNE. Ruremond. Long. 24. 22. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 35. N.

GUERNSEY, an iſland in the Engliſh Channel, about 30 miles in circumference; ſtill governed by the laws of Normandy, of which it was anciently a part; and though ſubject to England, and declared to be in the county of Hants, and dioceſe of Wincheſter, the French language is univerſally made uſe of. The air is pure, and the inhabitants in general healthy and long lived. The ſoil is rich and fertile, the corn raiſed is enough for the iſland, and cattle are bred in ſufficient quantities to victual their ſhips, with plenty of game and fowl. A lake, about a mile in circumference, ſituated in the north-weſt part of the iſland, is ſtored with excellent carp, and ſea-fiſh of various kinds are caught in plenty. The iſland is defended by a ridge of rocks, rugged and ſteep, from one of which is collected emery, or emeril, uſed by lapidaries and cutlers, to poliſh precious ſtones, ſteel, &c. The principal drink of the richer claſs is wine from France; of the interior, cider, great quantities of which are made yearly from the abundant orchards in every part of the iſland. Coals are imported from England, and, through the ſcarcity of wood and fuel, the poor are compelled to burn ſea-weed. When the reformation was firſt introduced into the iſland, the Genevan ritual was obſerved, but for a long time a tranſlation of the Liturgy of the Church of England has been uſed univerſally. It is divided into ten pariſhes, with only eight churches. The convention of the ſtates conſiſts of a governor, coroners, jurats, clergy, and conſtable. The inhabitants carry on a conſiderable trade to Newfoundland and the Mediterranean. The ſtaple manufacture is knit ſtockings. Port St. Pierre is the chief town. Long. 2. 56. W. GUIANA, a very extenſive country of South America, bounded on the north by the provinces of Venezuela and New Andaluſia, on the eaſt and north-eaſt by the Atlantic Ocean, on the ſouth by the river of the Amazons, and on the weſt by New Grenada ; 1100 miles in extent from eaſt to weſt, and from 300 to 600 in breadth from north to ſouth. Several ſettlements have been formed on the ſea coaſts by the Dutch, by the French, and by the Portugueſe : the latter have been united to the government of the Brazils, and are now conſidered as part of that country. Dutch Guiana is bounded on the eaſt by the river Marawina, and on the weſt by Cape Naſſau ; and contains the ſettlements of Surinam, Berbice, Eſſequebo, and Demerary, all which take their names from different rivers. French Guiana is ſituated between the rivers Marawina to the north-weſt, and Oyapoco to the ſouth-eaſt, and goes by the name of Cayenne, from the iſland ſo called. The inland part of Guiana is but little known. Alphonzo de Ojeda firſt landed in this country in 1499, with Americus Veſputius, and John de la Coſa. He went over a part of it ; but this expedition afforded him only a ſuperficial knowledge of ſo vaſt a country. Many others were undertaken at a greater expence, but turned out ſtill more unſucceſsful. A report prevailed, though its origin could not be diſcovered, that in the interior parts of Guiana, there was a country known by the name of El Dorado, which contained immenſe riches in gold and precious ſtones ; more mines and treaſures than ever Cortez and Pizarro had found. This fable not only inflamed the ardent imaginations of the Spaniards, but fired every nation of Europe. Sir Walter Raleigh, in particular determined in 1595, to undertake a voyage to Guiana ; but he returned without diſcovering any thing relative to the object of his voyage. See Surinam, Cayenne, &c.

HADDINGTON, a town of Scotland, and capital of a country, to which it gives name, ſituated on the river Tyne, which divides it into two equal parts. It is a burgh of great antiquity, and is governed by a provoſt, merchant bailies, dean of Guild, &c. The town conſiſts of four ſtreets, interſecting each other nearly at right angles ; the only buildings belonging to the burg, of any conſequence, are the town-houſe and ſchool houſe. There is a weekly market held on Friday, reckoned the greateſt in Scotland, for all kinds of grain. For ſeveral centuries paſt, a ſpecies of coarſe woollen has been manufactured here, and many weavers, particularly in the Nungate, ſtill make them, but the number of perſons employed in this branch is greatly diminiſhed of late. During the time of Cromwell's uſurpation, an Engliſh company, of which colonel Stanfield was the principal perſon, expended a very conſiderable ſum of money in eſtabliſhing a manufacture of fine woollen cloths. After the colonel's death the manufacture declined. A company was eſtabliſhed in 1750, for carrying on the woollen manufacture, and a large ſum was ſubſcribed ; but the trade proving unſucceſsful the company diſſolved, and a new one formed, which alſo in its turn was diſſolved a few years ago. The abby of Haddington was ſituated about a mile to the eaſtward of the burg, where there is ſtill a little village called The Abby, but the monaſtery itſelf is almoſt entirely demoliſhed. It was founded in the year 1178, by Ada, mother of Malcolm IV. and William the Lion, kings of Scotland, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It was at this abby that the parliament was convened, July 7th, 1548, during the ſiege of Haddington, which gave conſent to queen Mary's marriage with the dauphin, and her education at the court of France. Haddington has ſuffered frequently from fire, and from the inundations of the Tyne, which in October 4th, 1775, roſe ſeventeen feet perpendicular, continued in this ſtate ſeveral hours, and then gradually ſubſided. The number of inhabitants is rather more than 2000. John Knox, the famous reformer, was a native of this town : 28 miles NW. Berwick, and 14 E. Edinburgh.

HADDINGTONSHIRE, or Eaſt Lothian, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north-weſt by the Frith of Forth, on the north-eaſt by the German Ocean, on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt by Berwickſhire, and on the weſt by Edinburgſhire. The form is an irregular ſquare, and meaſures about fifteen miles each way. It is in general a rich tract of corn land, with ſome conſiderable woods, and plenty of coal mines, and quarries of lime-ſtone. On the coaſt are ſeveral convenient harbours and fiſhing towns ; great numbers of ſheep are fed in the hilly parts, and abundance of rabbits are found along the coaſts. Salt is made in ſeveral places, and the country may in general be accounted fertile, rich, and pleaſant. The chief towns are Dunbar, Haddington, and North Berwick ; the principal river is the Tyne. HAERLEM, or Harlem, a large, handſome, rich, and populous city of Holland, the capital of a country called Kemmer, ſituated about a league from the ſea, on the river Sparen. It holds a ſecond rank among the principal cities of Holland. William, king of the Romans, and comte of Holland, granted the citizens great privileges, becauſe they had ſignalized themſelves in the cruſades: the cruſaders, deſirous of ſeizing Damietta, a ſea-port town of Egypt, found a chain of iron thrown acroſs the river, which the citizens of Harlem found means to break, and thus gaining admittance into the port, compelled the Saracens to ſurrender, the 4th of June, 1249. Harlem was nearly burned down in the year 1347, and in the year 1351. It alſo ſuffered ſeverely from the faction of the Caes-en broot, who ſeized the city, and pillaged it, in 1492. Albert, duke of Saxony, retook it, puniſhed the principal mutineers, condemned the inhabitants in a fine of 27,000 crowns, and took away their privileges. The magiſtracy is compoſed of an eſcout, or bailey, a penſionary, two burgomaſters, ſeven echevins, and twenty-two common council: the eſcout is choſen once in four or five years by the echevins: the burgomaſters are elected every year by the common council. In the year 1559, Harlem was erected into a biſhopric by pope Paul IV. at the deſire of Philip II. king of Spain. In the year 1572, Frederic de Toledo, ſon of the duke of Alva, having ſacked the city of Zutphen, and put to death the greater part of the inhabitants of Naerden, laid ſiege to Harlem, the 11th of December; his army conſiſted of 36 companies of Spaniſh troops, 22 of Flemings, 18 of Germans, and 8000 horſe. The garriſon in the city, which conſiſted of 4000, beſides the citizens, was commanded by Wibald Ripperda, a gentleman of Frieſland, and the beſieged defended themſelves with great bravery for eight months: they took every occaſion to ſhow their hatred to the Catholic religion and the Spaniards, hanging all that fell into their hands on the ramparts, and throwing their heads to the enemies; but in the end they paid very dear; for, receiving no ſuccours, they were compelled by famine to ſurrender at diſcretion, on the 14th of July, 1673. The city was fined 100,000 florins, to ſave it from pillage, the citizens were compelled to carry their arms to the town-houſe, the governor and his lieutenant were beheaded, the ſoldiers of the garriſon, reduced to 1700 men of different countries, were all executed, ſome by the ſword, ſome by the rope, and others by drowning: all the magiſtrates were put to death, as likewiſe the principal people of the city, and the prieſts. This cruel puniſhment kept the inhabitants in awe till the year 1577, when they agreed to the union of the States, on condition that the Catholic religion ſhould be maintained; but this article was not long obſerved, for in the year 1577, ſome Proteſtant ſoldiers were introduced, who pillaged the churches, maſſacred the prieſts, and drove away the biſhop, who had returned after the reduction of the city; from which time the public exerciſe of the Roman Catholic religion has been prohibited. The exiled biſhop, the ſecond of the ſee, whoſe name was Godfrey de Mierlo, died at Deventer, in the year 1587. The church of S^t^. Bavon, once the cathedral, is one of the largeſt and handſomeſt churches in the ſtate, in the walls of which yet appear ſome cannon balls ſhot during the ſiege above mentioned; and in it are preſerved the models of three ſhips, in which the inhabitants of Harlem ſailed to Damietta; and in the ſteeple are two ſilver bells brought from that place. The Stadt-houſe is a grand building, ſituated at one end of the market place; and in it are many valuable pictures; among the reſt, the firſt painting in oil by Eyert, in 1437, which during the ſiege was ſold for a few ſtivers, and is now valued at 2000l. The number of houſes at Harlem, in the year 1732, was 7963, and that of the inhabitants about 40,000; there are four Dutch churches, one French, one Lutheran, one Arminian, and four Anabaptiſt, beſides private houſes or chapels for the Roman Catholics.—Harlem carries on conſiderable manufactories in linen, ribands, and tapes, and exports great quantities of beer to Frieſland and other places. They have alſo a great trade for flowers; Mr. Dutens ſays he ſaw a hyacinth, in May, 1771, for which the owner refuſed 10,000 florins. Harlem boaſts of the honour of having given birth to Laurence Coſter, who, as they pretend, was the firſt inventor of printing, which happened about the year 1440: 10 miles W. The greater part of the iſland is under the dominion of the emperor of China: the reſt is independent, and inhabited by a free people, who have never been ſubdued. Compelled to abandon their plains and fields to the Chineſe, they have retreated to the mountains in the centre of the iſland, where they are ſheltered from the inſults of their neighbours. Theſe people formerly had a free and open correſpondence with the Chineſe. Twice a year they expoſed, in an appointed place, the gold which they dug from their mines, with their eagle-wood and calamba, ſo much eſteemed by the Orientals. The emperor Kang-hi, informed of the prodigious quantity of gold which paſſed through the hands of the mandarins by this traffic, forbade his ſubjects under pain of death, to have any communication with theſe iſlanders: however, ſome private emiſſaries of the neighbouring governors ſtill find the means of having intercourſe with them; but what they get at preſent by this clandeſtine trade is little in compariſon of that which they gained formerly. The natives of this iſland are very deformed, ſmall of ſtature, and of a copper colour: both men and women wear their hair thruſt through a ring on their forehead; and above they have a ſmall ſtraw hat, from which hang two ſtrings that are tied under the chin. Their dreſs conſiſts of a piece of black or dark blue cotton cloth which reaches from the girdle to their knees; the women have a kind of robe of the ſame ſtuff, and mark their faces from the eyes to the chin with blue ſtripes, made with indigo. Beſides mines of gold and lapis-lazuli, which enrich the iſland of Hainan, it produces in abundance various kinds of curious and valuable wood. The predeceſſors of the preſent emperor cauſed ſome of it to be tranſported to Pe-king, at an immenſe expence, to adorn an edifice which he intended for a mauſoleum. The moſt valuable is called by the natives houli, and by the Europeans roſe or violet wood, from its ſmell; it is very durable, and of a beauty which nothing can equal; it is therefore reſerved for the uſe of the emperor. Hai-nan, on account of its ſituation, riches, and extent, deſerves to be ranked among the moſt conſiderable iſlands of Aſia. Long. 125. 50. to 128. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 18. 15. to 20. 2. N.

HAINAUT (County of), one of the provinces of the Catholic Netherlands, bounded on the north by Flanders and Brabant, on the eaſt by Brabant, the country of Namur, and biſhopric of Liege; on the ſouth by France, and on the eaſt by France and Flanders. Its greateſt extent from north to ſouth is about forty-eight miles, and from eaſt to weſt fifty-five. The air here is good and moderate. The ſoil produces corn in abundance. The rich paſtures feed large herds of cattle, and the ſheep yield good wool. Its woods and foreſts ſupply timber for building, and fuel for burning. In it are mines of coal and iron, and quarries of beautiful marble, ſlate, and other very uſeful and ſerviceable ſtone. The principal rivers, are the Scheldt, the Selle, the Haiſne, the Sambre, and the Dender. The time in which this province was raiſed to a county is not properly known. After the death of count Raginer IV. it deſcended, with his only daughter and heireſs, Richild, to Baldwin VI. count of Flanders, who was the firſt of that name among the counts. Count Baldwin VI. who died in the year 1204, left behind him two daughters, one of whom, named Margaret, was married to Burchard of Aveſnes, and brought to him the county of Hainaut. Their great grandſon, William II. died in 1345, without male heirs, upon which the county fell, together with his daughter Margaret, to the ſhare of the emperor, Louis, of Bavaria. The laſt proprietor of it, deſcended from this houſe, was William IV. whoſe daughter, Jaqueline, after being four times married, died without heirs, in 1436; upon which Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, arrived to the poſſeſſion of the county. By the peace of the Pyrennées, France obtained the towns of Landrecy, Queſnoy, Aveſnes, Marienbourg, and Philippeville; by the peace of Nimeguen, Valenciennes, Bouchain, Condé, Cambray, Bavay, and Maubeuge, with their reſpective diſtricts; and by the peace of Ryſwick, ſeveral villages. Mons is the capital.

HALBERSTADT, a principality of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, bounded on the north by the duchy of Wolfenbuttel and Magdeburg, on the eaſt by the duchy of Magdeburg, on the ſouth by the duchies of Anhalt and Blankenburg, and county of Werningerode, and on the weſt by the biſhopric of Hildeſheim; in its greateſt extent from eaſt to weſt about 36 miles, and 28 from north to ſouth. This principality is for the moſt part level, but contains alſo ſome eminences, though few hills. The ſoil is extremely fertile, both in grain and flax, with rich paſturages and meadows. The graziery here alſo is conſiderable, and their large breeds of ſheep afford plenty of wool. On the other hand, the woods are continually leſſening, and at preſent the want of fuel there is ſo great, that even ſtraw and ſtubble are uſed for it. The coal pits are of no great importance. Of game and fiſh the country has not even a ſufficiency, neither is there a river in it of any conſiderable bigneſs. The greateſt part of the inhabitants are Lutherans. The churches of that religion are divided into eleven inſpections, over which is a general ſuperintendency. The Calviniſts and Roman Catholics are pretty nearly equal in number. The latter are prohibited from making converts, as the convents, by an ordinance of 1702, are from purchaſing immoveable eſtates. The Jews are tolerated to a fixed number of families. The woollen manufactures eſtabliſhed in this country are in a thriving condition. The principality of Halberſtadt derives its origin from the ancient biſhopric of that name. The emperor, Charles the Great, is ſaid to have intended the erection of the ſee, but it did not take place till under his ſon, Louis I. and its firſt biſhop was Hildegrin, who was conſecrated in the year 814. At the treaty of Weſtphalia, in 1648, the dioceſe was transferred to the electoral houſe of Brandenburg as a temporal principality. But it was at that time in a bad ſituation, moſt of the eſtates and bailiwicks belonging to it being alienated. By good management, however, theſe were gradually redeemed.

HALBERSTADT, a city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and capital of a principality to which it gives name. The buildings here are old-faſhioned, and irregular. The inhabitants do not much exceed 1300, notwithſtanding which, within and about the town are 16 churches. Peterſhof, formerly the epiſcopal reſidence, is at preſent the place of all the ſovereign's offices. The records, together with the funds of ſeveral taxes, and likewiſe of the demeſnes are alſo kept there. The Commiſſe am Markt was an epiſcopal palace, which was rebuilt in 1606, by biſhop Henry Julius, but, in 1685, the ſovereign demanded it of the cathedral chapter; at preſent it is converted into the town-houſe, the toll, and exciſe offices. The cathedral, or St. Peter, is an old but ſtately building, conſtructed of a very hard free ſtone. The chapter is compoſed of a provoſt, a dean, a ſenior, and ſubſeniors, and ſixteen canons, of whom four are Roman Catholics, but all the others Lutheran. In 1179, the town was reduced to aſhes by the troops of Henry the Lion, in revenge of an injury done to him and his territories by biſhop Ulrich. In 1203, it was walled and moated. The increaſe of its inhabitants occaſioned the building of two ſuburbs, the houſekeepers in which are put on the ſame footing with the town burghers. Towards the beginning of the preſent century, another ſuburb was added to it. In the year 1752, the walls which environed near one half of this city, were pulled down, and the moats filled up, ſo as to form a level, which has been converted into a plantation of mulberry trees. In 1758, Halberſtadt was very ſeverely treated by the French, who demoliſhed its gates, and likewiſe its walls, for 800 rods in length: 30 miles SW. Magdeburg, and 34 SSE. Brunſwick. Long. 28. 43. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 54. N.

HALICZ, or Halitſck, a town of Poland, and capital of a ſmall country to which its gives name, in the palatinate of Lemberg, which was formerly a kingdom, ſituated on the Dnieſter. In the year 1375, the archiepiſcopal ſee of Lemberg was tranſlated hither; but, in 1416, it was removed again to Lemberg. Since the year 1773, it has belonged to the emperor, and is included in the new kingdom of Galicia: 58 miles SE. Lemberg.

HALIFAX, a town of England, in the weſt riding of the county of York. It is ſeated on a branch of the river Calder, rendered navigable to the Aire and Cuſe; it ſtands on a barren ſoil, and in a mountainous country. In its townſhip and pariſh there are a great many rivulets, favourable to trade, and affording innumerable ſituations for mills, for the woollen or other manufactures. The woollen manufacture has been long eſtabliſhed in this pariſh, and appears to have been very peculiarly foſtered and protected in early times, by having had the grant of a criminal juriſdiction within itſelf, for the trial by jury, and execution, by decollation, of ſuch offenders as were found guilty of theft to the value of thirteen-pence halfpenny. Though there were not above thirty houſes in it, in the year 1443, it was ſo populous in queen Elizabeth's time, that they ſent out 12,000 men to join her forces againſt the rebels; and ſo induſtrious were they, that, notwithſtanding the barren ſoil of the adjacent country, they had then enriched themſelves by the manufactures of kerſeys, and latterly of ſhalloons, of which latter it has been calculated that 100,000 pieces are made in a year in this pariſh alone, at the ſame time that almoſt as many kerſeys are made here as ever. And it has been affirmed, that one dealer here has traded, by commiſſion, for 600,000 pounds a year, to Holland and Hamburgh, in the ſingle article of kerſeys. For the convenience of trade, the manufacturers have erected an elegant edifice, called the Piece-Hall, or Manufacturers-Hall. It is in the form of an oblong ſquare, occupying 10,000 ſquare-yards, and containing 315 diſtinct rooms for the lodgment of goods, which are open for ſale once a week only, two hours on the market day, from ten o'clock till twelve. The form of this building is well adapted to its uſe, and unites elegance, convenience, and ſecurity. The principal manufactures of this pariſh are ſhalloons (of which conſiderable quantities are ſent to Turkey and the Levant) tammies, duroys, callamancoes, everlaſtings, ruſſels, figured and flowered amens, denims, ſays, moreens, and ſhags; alſo kerſeys, half-thicks, ſerges, honlies, baizes, narrow and broad cloths, coatings, and carpets. Here are alſo erected many mills for the cotton manufacture, which is rapidly increaſing. This pariſh is eſteemed the largeſt in England; it is upwards of 16 miles long, and from ſix to eight broad. Halifax gave birth to John of Halifax, or de Sacro Boſco, the chief mathematician of his age, who was buried at the public expence of the univerſity of Paris, and to the late archbiſhop Tillotſon. The church is old, but ſtately and venerable, and has in it many extraordinary monuments, but moſt of them of great antiquity. The vicar of this town is a juſtice of peace, as vicar. Beſides the mother-church, there are twelve chapels of eaſe within the pariſh: 16 miles SW. Leeds, 40 SW. York, and 197 NNW. London. Long. 1. 55. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 43. N.

HALIFAX, a ſea-port town of America, and capital of Nova Scotia, ſituated on the weſt ſide of Chebucto Bay, founded in the year 1747. The harbour is large and ſafe, and well ſituated for fiſhing. A few ſhips of war are generally ſtationed here. The town is defended with an intrenchment and ſome forts of timber. It is the reſidence of a governor and other officers. When the Britiſh troops evacuated Boſton, in the year 1776, they retired to this town. Long. 63. 26. W. Greenwich. Lat. 44. 42. N.

HALLA, or Hella, a town of Aſia, in the Arabian Irak, ſituated on both ſides the Euphrates, with a bridge of communication, ſuppoſed to have been built on the ſite of the ancient Babylon. It was formerly ſurrounded by a wall, which is now deſtroyed; the gardens are covered with fruit-trees, particularly palms, ſo that the town appears as if ſituated in a wood: 55 miles SSW. Bagdad, and 236 NW. Baſſora.

HALLAND, a province of Sweden, bounded on the north by Weſt Gothland, on the eaſt by Smaland, on the ſouth by Skone, and on the weſt by the North Sea. The country is in general mountainous, with conſiderable woods of oaks and birch-trees. The produce of corn is not ſufficient for the inhabitants, but the rivers, which are conſiderable, abound in fiſh, eſpecially ſalmon. The inhabitants carry on a profitable trade in cattle; their chief employ is grazing and fiſhing. The principal towns are Laholm, Halmſtadt, Falkenberg, and Wardberg.

HALLAREN, a lake of Sweden, in the province of Weſtmanland, 26 miles NW. Upſal.

HALLE, a town of the Netherlands, in the county of Hainaut, ſituated on the river Senne; once ſtrongly fortified, but the fortifications were deſtroyed, with its gates, in the year 1677. This town was celebrated for an image of the Virgin, to which were made many pilgrimages: 8 miles SSW. Bruſſels.

HALLE, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Magdeburg, ſituated on the Saale, and divided into four quarters. Here is a celebrated univerſity, formed out of a military academy, and conſecrated in the year 1694, where many of the nobility, and even princes, have been ſtudents. There are three Lutheran churches, with places of worſhip for Calviniſts and Roman Catholics, and a ſynagogue for the Jews. The magiſtrates enjoy many privileges, and conſiderable poſſeſſions. The number of houſes which pay taxes is about 1100, the number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 13 or 14,000, without reckoning the ſtudents or garriſon. Beſides the common handicrafts of the town, there are ſeveral manufactures, as gloves, worſted and ſilk ſtockings, cloth, flannels, fuſtian, linen, tobacco-pipes, china, Hungary-water, ſtarch, ribands, red and yellow Turkey leather, &c. The vale of Halle conſiſts of the loweſt part of the town, and lies on the Saale. In it are four rich ſalt ſprings, with 112, or, at preſent, more properly, only 96 houſes, where the water from the Saale is boiled, in order to make ſalt. The ſalt here is boiled with pit-coal. Thoſe for whoſe profit the ſalt is boiled, are called Pfanners, and muſt be freemen of Halle. The boiling itſelf is performed by the Hallers, who are deſcendants of the Wends, a people who in ancient times inhabited this country, and ſtill retain their dreſs, language, and cuſtoms. It is to theſe ſalt ſprings that the city of Halle owes its origin, but the particular time is not known. So early, however, as the beginning of the ninth century it appears that there was ſuch a place; and, in the year 965 or 966, the emperor Otho I. made a donation of it to the church at Magdeburg. By the emperor Otho II. alſo, it was enlarged, and endowed with a charter. In 1414, it was beſieged by archbiſhop Gunther II. but not taken, however it bought its ſafety at that time with a large ſum of money. In 1435, it was again beſieged, in vain, by Frederick, elector of Saxony; but, in 1478, was taken by archbiſhop Erneſt. In the 16th and 17th centuries, it frequently underwent the ſame fate; and, in 1757 and 1758, being ſurpriſed by the French and Auſtrians, ſuffered very ſevere exactions. The regency of the former archbiſhopric, now called the duchy of Magdeburg, reſided at this place till the year 1714, when its ſeat was removed to Magdeburg: 56 miles S. Magdeburg, and 22 NW. Leipſick.

HAMBURG, a free and imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, ſituated in that part of Holſtein called Stormar, about 60 miles from the influx of the Elbe into the ocean, and properly ſituated on the rivers Elbe, Alſter, and Bille. The Elbe, which at the city, the little iſlands included, is not leſs than a German mile in breadth, beſides forming two ſpacious harbours, runs through moſt parts of the city in canals, which being generally pretty broad and deep, are of prodigious convenience to the merchants, whoſe houſes ſtand on them. In theſe canals, as well as in the river itſelf, even to the diſtance of ſeveral miles above Hamburg, the tide ebbs and flows twice a day, which is alſo in many reſpects of ſervice to the inhabitants, though not without the frequent and great inconveniency of inundations occaſioned by the north-weſt winds, at which time the lower buildings and cellars are filled with water. The bridges over the canals are computed at eighty-four, and that not without probability, many of them not being ſo much as diſtinguiſhed by ſtrangers, as being paved like the ſtreets, with which they are generally on a level, and not a few alſo adorned with houſes on each ſide. The ſtreets are for the moſt part of pretty conſiderable breadth, but the houſes recommend themſelves more by their inward conveniences than by any outward ornaments of architecture. Some of theſe ſtreets, however, make a grand appearance, but for the moſt part they are very narrow, and there is ſtill a greater number of lanes, wherein many families live together, ſo that the circuit of the city is by no means proportionate to the number of its inhabitants. Round the ramparts it is but an eaſy two hours' walk, and the number of inhabitants within this circuit, excluſive of Jews, is eſtimated at 100,000. It is natural to be imagined that in ſo populous a place, there muſt be great numbers of poor, and this has by degrees given occaſion to ſo many public foundations, that in this point, as well as for its excellent regulations with regard to fires, Hamburgh is greatly admired by foreigners. The fortifications of the city are in the old Dutch taſte, the moats being deep and wide, the ramparts lofty, and planted with trees, and of ſuch a breadth too, that ſeveral carriages may go abreaſt. On theſe ramparts every one has the liberty of taking the air. The number of baſtions round the town is 24, with ſome out-works, particularly thoſe called the Sternchanze and the Neuewerk. The latter is properly only a line regularly fortified, and incloſing the ſtreets, houſes, and gardens, by ſome called the Neuen Werk, or the Suburb of St. George. The Hamburgerberg may be ſtyled a ſuburb, but this is not environed by any works, and the houſes on it extend almoſt as far as Altona, inſomuch that it is only a ditch which ſeparates the one from the other. The city has four capital gates, and two ſmaller, and two water gates, called the Upper and Lower Baum. Through the latter paſs all ſhips going to or coming from ſea. Every morning at the opening of it is ſeen a multitude of boats and ſmall barks, whoſe cargoe conſiſts of milk, fruits, and all kinds of proviſions, all ruſhing in at the ſame time: and in this manner the country people, who are for the moſt part under the neighbouring juriſdiction, together with a greater number of others on the land ſide in carriages, as likewiſe moſt of the neighbouring peaſantry, daily bring in part of the ſubſiſtence neceſſary to the city, and on the other hand return home with their own. The exerciſe of certain regalia here appertains ſolely to the magiſtracy; but in all affairs of general concern the burghery aſſiſt at the deliberations: and in order to give validity to any motion made by the magiſtracy, in caſes relative to the joint aſſembly of the magiſtracy and people, the conſent of both ſides is required. All points touching the impoſition of taxes and new laws, are by the magiſtracy laid before the firſt college of the burghery, then before the ſecond, next before the third, and laſtly before the whole body, and on the approbation of both claſſes, is termed a decree of the magiſtracy and burghery, or ſimply a Receſz. The magiſtracy is at preſent compoſed of thirty-ſeven perſons, or more uſually of thirty-ſix, that is to ſay, four burgher-maſters, four ſyndics, twenty-four aldermen, and four ſecretaries, of whom one is prothonotary, and another acts as recorder, but the votes are limited to the burghermaſters and the aldermen, of the firſt of whom one muſt be a trader, and of the latter thirteen traders, and the reſt graduates. Any perſon elected into the magiſtracy, and declining the office, muſt depart the city. Lutheraniſm is the eſtabliſhed religion of this city, and no other public exerciſe of religion is tolerated here. In the mean time both Papiſts and Calviniſts have an opportunity of attending worſhip at the envoys of the emperor, and other ſovereigns, to the circle of Lower Saxony, who reſide in the city; and the Engliſh, whoſe merchants form a company here, have divine ſervice performed in a building called the Engliſh Houſe. Formerly the principal occupation of the inhabitants (commerce excepted) conſiſted in brewing and the cloth manufacture; and even to this very day, the companies, of which each has its appointed patron in the corporation, enjoy many privileges. At preſent the principal manufacture here is, beyond diſpute, the ſugar refinery, for which, whether it be owing to the quality of the water, or whatever be the cauſe, Hamburg has hitherto been diſtinguiſhed. The cotton, ſtocking, gold thread, ribbon and velvet manufactures here, with others, are greatly eſteemed abroad. With reſpect to its ſeveral branches of commerce, linen, cloth, ſilk ware, wine, ſugar, coffee, colours, ſpices, metals, tobacco, wood, leather, grain, dried and ſalt fiſh, train oil, and furs, are accounted the moſt conſiderable of them, though this point is not eaſily aſcertained, the merchants here buying up all kind that offer, and the convenient ſituation of the city drawing thither a great variety. An uncommon benefit to the merchants of Hamburg is the ſpecie bank, erected there in 1619, and which, for the goodneſs of its credit and prudent regulations, is by no means inferior to any, even the moſt flouriſhing. With the bank is connected the corn money, by which the granaries are kept well ſtocked for ſupplying the poor with meal at a low rate, as alſo the mintage. This laſt privilege, which it holds by charters from the emperors, it has always exerciſed, Hamburg ducats being to be ſeen of every year for a long time paſt, not to mention the Banco Portugaleſer, of which thoſe called whole, weigh ten, and the half ones five, ducats. Of ſilver money it coins alſo very large quantities. The ſtandard obſerved here is preciſely the ſame with that of Lubeck. In the matricula of the empire of 1521, this city is aſſeſſed at 20 horſe and 120 foot; and in the laſt matricula of the chamber at Wetzlar, is rated at 439 rixdollars, 50 kruitzers and a half. Long. 27. 20. HAMELN, a fortified town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and capital of a quarter, in the principality of Calenberg to which it gives name, ſituated on the Weſer, which here forms an iſland, and is furniſhed with a ſluice, for the convenience of the ſhipping. The river Hamel, which probably gave name to the town, here joins the Weſer. In the town are about 600 houſes of merchants and tradeſmen, with fifty eccleſiaſtical and other ſplendid buildings. There are only two churches. The magiſtrates are poſſeſſed of the civil and criminal juriſdiction. It formerly belonged to the abby of Fulda, from which it was ſold to the biſhop of Minden. In the latter end of the 16th century, it came into the poſſeſſion of the elder line of Wolfenbuttel. In the year 1625, it was firſt beſieged by the Danes, and on their departure taken, by capitulation, by the imperialiſts, who continued there till the year 1633, to the great oppreſſion of the place, and in 1630, put the biſhop of Hildeſheim in poſſeſſion of one half of the town, which had been mortgaged to him; but this mortgage being redeemable for the ſum of 2000 florins, the loyal burghers raiſed the money, and paid it at the town-houſe of Hildeſheim, of which duke Chriſtian expreſſed his grateful ſenſe to them; and in conſideration of this their zeal, in 1631 granted to the town the toll and police. In the ſame year, duke Frederic Ulrich transferred the town to duke Chriſtian, of the Zell line, to whoſe repreſentatives it did private homage. In 1633, the Imperial garriſon ſurrendered it to duke George, as general of the Swediſh forces. In 1757, it was taken, on capitulation, by the French, who evacuated it again the following year: 28 miles SW. Hanover, and 18 SE. Minden. Long. 26. 38. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 10. N.

HAMPSHIRE, otherwiſe called The County of Hants and County of Southampton, a county of England, bounded on the north by Berkſhire, on the eaſt by Surry and Suſſex, on the ſouth by the Engliſh Channel, and on the weſt by the counties of Wilts and Dorſet. The air is healthy, and the ſoil in general fertile, but various; a large proportion inclining to chalk, with a great quantity of rich land and meadows. Towards Berkſhire, with the exception of a ſmall tract on the eaſt, which is heathy, the land is in general deep and good, producing great crops of corn, and is well planted with good timber, particularly oak and elm. Towards Dorſetſhire, in the ſouth-weſt part of the county, the land is open, and large tracts are covered with heath. The principal productions are corn, timber, and wool. The number of ſheep in the county is eſtimated at 350,000. Hampſhire is a great breeding county, and the ſtocks in moſt pariſhes are very large, although they are ſuppoſed to be reduced one third, on account of the downs being broken up, and the incloſures which have taken place. The planting of hops has of late years increaſed in this county, principally on the borders of Surry, the great repute of the Farnham hops ſeems to have been the cauſe of this undertaking, but notwithſtanding the plantation are in pariſhes adjoining to Farnham, the hops will only produce a very inferior price. Hampſhire is 60 miles in length, 30 in breadth, and 150 in circumference. It is divided into thirty-nine hundreds, which contain one city, Wincheſter, twenty market towns, and 1062 villages. The towns are Southampton, Portſmouth, Andover, Chriſtchurch, Stockbridge, Lymington, Petersfield, Whitchurch, Goſport, Baſingſtoke, Alresford, Alton, Fareham, Havant, Kingſclere, Odiham, Waltham, Fordingbridge, Romſey, and Ringwood, without reckoning thoſe of the Iſle of Wight; the firſt eight, with Wincheſter, ſend members to the Britiſh parliament, to which, adding the three boroughs in the iſle of Wight, and two for the county, twenty-ſix members are returned to the Britiſh parliament. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 200,000.

HAMPSHIRE, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts.

HAMPSHIRE, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

HAMPSHIRE (New), one of the ſtates of United America, bounded on the north by Canada, on the eaſt by the diſtrict of Main and the Atlantic Ocean, on the ſouth by the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts, and on the weſt by Vermont; about 155 miles in length from north to ſouth, the breadth is unequal, towards the ſouth it meaſures about ſeventy-two miles, but gradually diminiſhes, as it advances northward, to little more than ten. This ſtate firſt began to be ſettled about the year 1629, and was erected into a ſeparate government in the year 1679, but ſeems afterwards to have been under the ſame governor with Maſſachuſets, becauſe New Hampſhire complained to the king, in council, againſt the joint governor relative to the boundaries betwen the two colonies, and on hearing the complaint, a ſeparate governor was appointed in the year 1740. The land near the ſea is generally flat, but farther into the country hilly, and in ſome places mountainous. The air is healthy and ſerene; cold in winter; the greateſt ſummer heat continues but a ſhort time. The ſoil is various, in ſome places ſandy, but generally affording good paſture; other parts are a deep rich mould, producing corn and vegetables in great plenty. The uncultivated lands are covered with extenſive foreſts of oaks, walnuts, cedar, pine, firs, &c. Apples and pears are the principal fruit of new Hampſhire; the inhabitants make great quantities of cyder and perry for home conſumption and ſale to the other ſtates. Beef, pork, wheat, Indian corn, barley, butter and cheeſe, are ſold into the ſouthern ſtates and the Weſt Indies; ſheep and ſwine were at firſt ſent over from England, and have ſucceeded well. The chief commodities which conſtitute the trade of New Hampſhire are timber, maſts, yards, ſpars, lumber, proviſions, fiſh, cattle, pot and pearl aſhes, and flax-ſeed. Ships are built in all the towns ſituated on the river Piſcataqua, The cod fiſhery is carried on with conſiderable ſpirit and advantage. Some of the fiſh are diſpoſed of to the Weſt India Iſlands, the reſt are carried to Europe. New Hampſhire is divided into five counties, Cheſhire, Grafton, Hillſborough, Rockingham, and Strafford. The number of inhabitants, in the year 1790, according to a cenſus, taken by order of Congreſs, amounted to 141,985. At this time the number is greatly increaſed. The chief towns are Portſmouth, Exeter, Concord, Dover, Durham, Keen, Charleſton, Amherſt, Haverhall, and Plymouth. The principal rivers are the Merrimack and the Piſcataqua. The river Connecticut ſeparates it in its whole extent from the ſtate of Vermont.

HANOSFALVA, a town of Hungary : 12 miles NE. Szeben.

HANOVER, a city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Calenberg, ſituated on the Leine, which divides it into two towns, Old and New. Hanover, or Alſtadt Hanover, was formerly the capital of the electorate, and reſidence of the elector, but now ranks the ſecond among the four large cities of the principality of Calenberg, Gottingen being the firſt. It is the ſeat of the privy council, and of the regency of all the territories belonging to the electorate houſe of Brunſwick Luneberg. It is ſituated on the left ſide of the Leine, which, running in two channels between the old and new town, and thus forming an iſland, unites into one ſtream again, and then becomes navigable. The town itſelf is fortified, and contains about 1200 houſes, among which are divers very large and handſome buildings. The elector's palace, ſituated on that ſide fronting the Leine, having been deſtroyed by fire, was rebuilt in 1741, with great magnificence. In it the privy council and commiſſioners of war hold their meetings. In the chapel belonging to it, which is very ſplendid, is kept a treaſure of great value, conſiſting of reliques, gold and ſilver plate, and gems collected by duke Henry the Lion, in his journey to the Eaſt in 1171 and the ſucceeding years ; which treaſure was at firſt lodged in St. Blair's church, at Brunſwick, but on the ſurrender of that city to duke John Frederick, was brought to Hanover. The ſtates houſe is a very grand ſtructure. In this building are held the Calenberg diets, and likewiſe thoſe of the high court of juſtice. Hanover contains three pariſh churches, a poor-houſe, and three hoſpitals. Here are manufactures of lace, ſtuff, ſtockings, ribbons, &c. The tanneries form a conſiderable branch of trade, as likewiſe a ſpecies of white beer, invented in the year 1526, by one Broihar, whoſe name it bears. Hanover was unknown before the year 1163. In the year 1241, this town was transferred, by Conrad, count of Lauenrode, at that time proprietor of it, to duke Otho the Child, who promiſed the burghers that it ſhould be made unalienable, and remain for ever in his houſe. But notwithſtanding theſe engagements, in 1283, his grandſon, duke Otho the Severe, was for making it over to the biſhop of Hildeſheim, which cauſed an inſurrection, and the biſhop never got poſſeſſion of it. In 1297, however, a reconciliation was effected between the ſovereign and the inhabitants. In 1725, an alliance was concluded here between Great Britain, France, and Pruſſia, to which, in 1726, Holland alſo acceded. In 1757, the French poſſeſſed themſelves of the city, but quitted it again in 1758. The Neuſtadt Hanover is ſituated on the right ſide of the Leine, oppoſite Old Hanover, and communicates with it by means of bridges. This town is fortified, and although it contains hardly 400 houſes, is well built and populous. Its magiſtracy is poſſeſſed of the civil juriſdiction alone. It is the ſeat, however, of the conſiſtory for the electoral territories, as likewiſe of the general ſuperintendency of the principality of Calenberg, and of a ſpecial ſuperintendency. It contains alſo ſeveral valuable manufactures : 58 miles SE. Bremen, and 140 W. Berlin. Long. 27. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 27. N.

HANOVER (Electorate of), comprehends the duchies of Zell, Saxe-Lauenburg, Bremen, Luneburg, the principalities of Calenberg, Verden-Grubenhagen, Diepholz, Hoya, Oberwald, &c. The dignity of elector was conferred on Erneſt Auguſtus, duke of Brunſwick Hanover, by the emperor Leopold, in the year 1692, as a reward for the great ſervices done by the duke in a war with the French king, Louis XIV. This new creation met with great oppoſition, both in the electoral college and the college of princes ; but at laſt, by a concluſion of the three colleges, on the 30th of January, 1708, it was unanimouſly determined that the electoral dignity ſhould be confirmed to the duke of Hanover and his heirs male, but it was added, that if, while that electoral dignity ſubſiſted, the Palatine electorate ſhould happen to fall into the hands of a Proteſtant prince, the firſt Catholic elector ſhould have a ſupernumerary vote. This concluſion being eaſily agreed to by the emperor, the duke of Hanover was introduced into the electoral college on the 12th of September the ſame year. In the year 1714, the elector, George, became king of England, at the death of queen Anne, by virtue of the act of ſettlement.

HARDERWYCK, a ſeaport town of Guelderland, ſituated on the Zuyder See. It was only a village before 1229, when Otho, ſirnamed the Cripple, ſurrounded it with walls. It was formerly conſidered one of the Hanſe Towns. In 1503, the whole was burned down, except five or ſix houſes; but was ſoon afterwards rebuilt, and is now a populous town, with a ſmall univerſity founded in 1618. It had five gates, three towards the land, and two towards the ſea. In the year 1508, Charles d'Egmont, the laſt duke of Guelders, laid ſiege to it, but was at that time obliged to retire. Three years afterwards he took it by ſurpriſe. In 1552, it was retaken by comte de Buren, for Charles V.; and in 1572, the comte de Bergh took poſſeſſion of it for the confederates. In 1672, the French made themſelves maſters of it, but abandoned it two years after; but not before they had deſtroyed the fortifications. The church of St. Martin is much admired for its tower and architecture: the Zuyder See has made conſiderable encroachments at different times, which obliges them to keep the town defended with dykes: 25 miles NE. Utrecht, and 19 W. Deventer. Long. 23. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 22. N.

HARJEDALEN, a province of Sweden, in the diviſion called Nordland, incorporated with the Swediſh dominions in the year 1645. It is about 100 miles in length, and from 40 to 50 in breadth. It abounds in mines and woods; and conſequently agriculture is not much practiſed here. Its paſtures, however, are ſo excellent, that the inhabitants carry on a very advantageous trade in horned cattle. Its rivers and lakes, like all the reſt in the country, abound with fiſh. The inhabitants ſubſiſt by grazing, hunting, and fiſhing; and ſell a great quantity of cheeſe, which is much eſteemed. They maintain no ſoldiers in this province; and ſeveral places among the mountains are inhabited by Lappers.

HARLECH, or Harleich, a town of Wales, in the county of Merioneth, with a weekly market on Saturday; remarkable only for a caſtle, which is ſeated on a lofty rock, above an extenſive marſh, near the Iriſh Sea. The preſent caſtle was built by Edward I.; in the year 1460, Margaret of Anjou, queen of Henry VI. retired hither, after the unfortunate battle of Northampton, whence, after a ſhort ſtay, ſhe fled to Scotland. In the year 1468, this caſtle was held by a brave Welchman for the houſe of Lancaſter, and ſurrendered to the earl of Pembroke on honourable terms: 24 miles S. Caernarvon, and 223 NW. London. Long. 4. 14. W. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 48. N.

HARLINGEN, a ſea-port town of Frieſland, on the Zuyder See. In the year 1496, the inhabitants of Groningen built a caſtle here, and 14 years afterwards, Albert, duke of Saxony, built another, ſtronger than the firſt. It is not exactly known when it was ſurrounded with walls: but certain it is, that in the years 1543, and 1579, the city was conſiderably enlarged by the care of William, prince of Orange. This place is now very well fortified, and naturally ſtrong, the adjacent country being very eaſily laid under water. There have been ſome dykes raiſed here, to ſtop the fury of the waves. The city is ſquare, the ſtreets handſome, ſtraight, and clean, with canals in the middle of them. It is adorned with five gates, four towards the land, and one towards the ſea. Though the harbour be large and much frequented, yet by reaſon of the ſands that lie before it, veſſels of great burden muſt either lie off at a great diſtance at ſea, or unload part of their cargo before they can get in. Their chief trade conſiſts in making ſails, in importing and exporting corn, pitch, tar, fir-trees, and deals. This city has a grammar-ſchool and two hoſpitals. The adjacent country yields abundance of corn, paſture, and other neceſſaries for life: 14 miles W. Lewarden. Long. 22. 46. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 11. N.

HARTLEPOOL, a ſea-port town of England, on the eaſt coaſt, in the county of Durham, with a harbour for ſmall veſſels. It is ſituated on a promontory almoſt ſurrounded by the German Ocean, and was at one time ſtrongly fortified both by art and nature; and within the walls was a baſon, which ſerved as a harbour, in which veſſels lay fully defended from ſtorms, and chains thrown acroſs could prevent the approach of an enemy; but this is now choaked up, and rendered unſerviceable by mud and filth. In the reign of Edward III. it furniſhed the royal navy with five ſhips, and thoſe not inconſiderable ones, at leaſt for the period. It is now a conſiderable fiſhing-town; and light colliers find a ſecure road, when not able to reach Newcaſtle, Shields, or Sunderland. Coals and lime form the principal exports. Of late years it has been much frequented by company, for the purpoſe of ſea-bathing, and by ſome invalids on account of a mineral ſpring. It is a corporation town, and governed by a mayor and alderman. The market is held on Saturday: 10 miles N. Stockton, and 254 N. London. Long. 1. 16. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 38. N.

HARWICH, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Eſſex, ſituated at the mouths of the Stour and Orwell, where they unite and form a large bay, ſoon after falling into the German Ocean, by a ſtrait near three miles wide at high water, but not in every part deep enough for ſhips of burden; the eaſt ſide is defended by Landguard Fort. Harwich was formerly fortified, but in the reign of Charles I. the fortifications were demoliſhed. It is not large but populous, and being the chief port for packets to Holland; is a place of conſiderable trade, and many veſſels are employed in the North ſea fiſhery, and the harbour, independent of the bay, is ſafe and convenient. Here is a very good dock-yard for building ſhips; and great conveniences erected here for ſea-bathing both hot and cold. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament; and is governed by a mayor and aldermen. Here are two markets weekly, on Tueſday and Friday; and in time of peace packets ſail regularly, if wind and weather do not prevent, every Wedneſday and Saturday, with the mail, to Helvoetſluys, a paſſage of about 30 leagues: 72 miles NE. HARZ, a foreſt and mountain in Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, extending from the bailiwic of Landgelſheim, in the principality of Wolfenbuttel, and the county of Goſlar, through the eaſt part of the principality of Grubenhagen, a part of the county of Wernigerade, and the principality of Blankenburg, to the counties of Hohnſtein and Stollberg, as far as Harzgerode, in the principality of Anhalt, being in length about 48 miles, and in breadth about twenty. The air here is ſo cold, that the winters uſually laſt one half of the year. The rains, ſnows, and fogs are alſo more frequent than in the levels around it; yet thoſe who live and tranſact their buſineſs above ground, and not in the mines and forges, arrive to as great an age as the inhabitants of the levels. Tillage and the cultivation of fruits turn to no account here, the product ſeldom ripening, ſo that the whole harveſt conſiſts of good hay. The foreſt which covers the mountain conſiſts one third of it hard wood, namely, of oak, beech, aſh, aſpen, alder, birch, &c. and two thirds of ſoft wood, among which are firs and pines. This abundance of timber, though in itſelf of great importance, yet is the more valuable here, as without it the mines and forges could not ſubſiſt. The minerals found here, are, yellow oker, vitriol, ſaltpetre, ſulphur, lapis calaminaris, and zink; together with cobalt for the making of powder blue, lead, borax, iron, copper, braſs, ſilver, and ſome gold. The Harz being divided into Upper and Lower: the mine works in it are diſtinguiſhed by the like diviſions. According to the tenor of an agreement concluded in 1635, and the convention of Hildeſheim, made in 1649, between the electoral houſe and that of the prince, the former poſſeſſes four-ſevenths, and the latter three, with venery and maſtage to a certain degree throughout the whole tract thus held in common; and to which likewiſe belong the ſalt-works near Harzburg; the whole Harz yields annually about 1,172,733 rix-dollars, of which, to the value of 2,880, is gold, which is coined into ducats, and 802,860 ſilver; which after a deduction of all charges, the ſurplus or neat profit ariſing from it amounts to 425,274 rix.dollars. The ſovereigns purchaſe the products of theſe mine works, at a certain rate, of the proprietors or overſeers. The ſilver is coined immediately on the Harz. The other products, the mine offices at Hanover and Wolfenbuttel take at a ſtipulated price; making their returns in tallow, leather, and other neceſſaries for the mine works, which are alſo furniſhed at a certain rate. The inhabitants of the Harz are compoſed of miners, labourers in the melting houſes; wood-hewers, carriers, and the ſovereign's officers and ſervants; together with miniſters, ſchool-maſters, artificers, handicraftmen, and tradeſmen. Theſe neither pay licent nor contribution money; the only impoſts levied on them being that whereby in the towns, the owner of every houſe is taxed, in one rix-dollar, and a lodger and a mine officer in half a one, with a ſmall exciſe on beer imported there. But this is again applied to the minage, and benefit of the miners and labourers in the ſmelting houſes.

HASTINGS, a town of England, in the county of Suſſex, and the firſt of thoſe called the Cinque Ports; ſaid to have been ſo called, from one Haſtings, a Dane, who landed here, to pillage the country, and built a fort to ſecure his retreat. The harbour, formerly of conſiderable conſequence, is now only an indifferent road for ſmall veſſels, having been ruined by ſtorms, like the port of Winchelſea. As chief of the Cinque-ports, it was obliged to provide twenty-one veſſels for the king's ſervice, on forty days' notice, with proviſions, arms, and men, fit for warlike ſervice, and continue a fortnight at their own charge; if at the end of that time their farther ſervice was required, the expences were defrayed by the crown. Haſtings contains three pariſhes, but only two churches; the number of houſes is about 600, and the inhabitants eſtimated at 3000. This port received charters from Edward the Confeſſor, William I. Charles II. and ſeveral other of our kings; and has ſent members to the Britiſh parliament, ever ſince the reign of Edward III. There is a conſiderable fiſhery carried on here, particularly herrings and mackarel, and ſeveral hoys trade regularly, to and from London. There are two markets weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday. In the year 1066, a battle was fought near this town, between Harold II. king of England, and William duke of Normandy, in which the former loſt his life and kingdom. There fell of the Normans, near 15,000 men; and a much greater number of the Engliſh. William, ſirnamed the Conqueror, was ſoon after acknowledged, and crowned king of England; and introduced a memorable epoch in the annals of this country: 40 miles E. Brighthelmſtone, and 64 SE. HAVANNAH, a city and ſeaport of the iſland of Cuba, ſituated on the North coaſt, founded by Diego Velaſques, who conquered the iſland, at the beginning of the 16th century, at the mouth of the river Lagida, on the weſt ſide of the harbour, with the ſea in its front. The harbour is not only the beſt in the iſland, but by many eſteemed the beſt in the world, not only on account of its ſtrength, but becauſe it is capable of containing, commodiouſly, 1000 ſhips, without either cable or anchor, there being generally ſix fathom water in the bay. The entrance into the harbour is by a narrow channel, very difficult of acceſs, and fortified ſtrongly with platforms, works, and artillery, for half a mile, which is the length of the paſſage. The mouth of this channel is ſecured by two ſtrong caſtles, one on the eaſt ſide, called the Moro Fort, built in the form of a triangle, fortified with baſtions, and mounted with 40 pieces of cannon, almoſt level with the water. On the oppoſite ſide of the channel, lies another ſtrong fort, called the Puntal, joining to the town, which is ſituated to the weſtward of the entrance of the harbour, and is ſurrounded by ramparts, baſtions, and ditches. Beſides theſe fortifications, there are many others forts and platforms, all of them furniſhed with artillery, even to profuſion. In the harbour of the Havannah, the Spaniſh galleons and flota, containing all their American treaſures, aſſemble, and ſail from thence to Europe; of conſequence, this is the moſt populous, and richeſt town that the Spaniards have upon their Weſt India iſlands; and it had been always the chief care of the court of Spain to provide it with a ſtrong garriſon, commanded by the ableſt officers they had in their ſervice. The Havannah contains eleven churches and monaſteries; two hoſpitals, &c. the churches are handſome, and richly ornamented, with a profuſion of lamps, chandeliers, &c. of ſilver and gold. The juriſdiction of the town extends to half the iſland, the other half belonging to the capital, St. Jago. While the galleons lie here, a fair is held, in which great ſums of money are ſpent, and every thing is exceſſively dear; but at all times the price of every neceſſary of life at the Havannah is extravagant, bread particularly; neither have they any great variety of freſh meat, nor is what they have of the beſt kinds, excepting their pork. This inconvenience is not owing to any defect in the ſoil of the iſland, but to the indolence of the Spaniards. During the war between Henry II. of France, and the emperor Charles V. it was taken, and burnt by the French; and in the year 1689, it was taken by the Buccaneers, under the command of captain Morgan. In the year 1762, the Havannah was taken by the Engliſh, under the command of lord Albermarle and admiral ſir George Pocock, together with twelve men of war, and three frigates. The Moro Fort, was taken by ſtorm, after a ſiege of twenty-nine days. It was reſtored at the peace of Paris, in 1763. Long. 82. 14. W. Greenwich. Lat. 23. 12. N.

Havre-de-Grâce (Le), a ſeaport town of France, and ſeat of a tribunal, in the department of the Lower Seine, ſituated in a flat marſhy ſoil, interſected with creeks and ditches, at the mouth of the Seine. In the year 1509, it contained only a few houſes, inhabited by fiſhermen. Francis I. erected it into a town, and called it, Ville de François, which was afterwards changed to the name it now bears, on account of a chapel, and the harbour formed by the mouth of a river. The harbour has particular advantages above all others on the coaſts; the water does not begin to ebb till three hours after the full tide, which gives an opportunity for a great number of ſhips to depart in the ſame tide. The cauſe of this is attributed to the current of the Seine, which croſſes the mouth of the harbour, as ſoon as the ſea begins to retire, and thus confines the water in the harbour till it has ſpent its ſtrength. The baſon is reſerved for ſhips of war, with ſufficient room for thirty, and depth of water for veſſels of ſixty guns. Before the revolution, it was the ſeat of a governor-general, and other officers: a bailiwick, admiralty, &c.; it contained two churches, three convents, an hoſpital, town-houſe, an arſenal, magazines, and ſtore houſes neceſſary for the conſtruction and arming of ſhips. It is defended by lofty walls, large ditches filled with water, and furniſhed with ſluices; a regular citadel with baſtions, &c. During the civil wars, on account of religion in France, the French Huguenots ſeized on this town, and put it into the hands of the Engliſh; but in the year 1563, the proteſtants concluding a peace, the Engliſh garriſon was obliged to ſurrender the town on capitulation. In the year 1694, this town was bombarded by the Engliſh fleet, under the command of lord Berkley and captain Benbow, and ſeveral houſes deſtroyed. In the year 1759, the town was again bombarded by the Engliſh, under the command of rear-admiral Rodney, which ſet fire to the town ſeveral times, and deſtroyed a great number of flat-bottomed boats, that were intended to bring troops over to England: 10½ poſts W. HESPRES, a river of France, which runs into the Sambre, 5 miles below Landrecy.

HESPYN, a river of Wales, which runs into the Cluyd, 2 miles S. Ruthyn, in the county of Denbigh.

HESSE, a principality of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, the boundaries of which have been different at different times; at preſent it is bounded by the biſhopric of Fulda, the principalities of Hersfeld, Thuringia, Eichsfeld, Calenberg, and Waldeck, biſhopric of Paderborn, duchy of Weſtphalia, and counties of Wirgenſtein, Solmes, Naſſau Dillenburg, and Upper Iſenburg. In theſe limits the county of Catzenelnbogen and ſome other territories are not included. The landgraviate of Heſſe, conſidered in itſelf, is rather more than eighty miles in length; the breadth is very unequal. The air is wholeſome; the ſoil is mountainous and woody, interſperſed with pleaſant vallies and plains, fertile in corn and paſtures, which feed multitudes of cattte; the ſides of the hills are covered with vines; game and fiſh are plentiful, ſo likewiſe are fruit and honey. Near Frankenberg is a gold-mine, and ſome gold-ſand is found in the Eder. Silver, copper, lead, and iron, are found in conſiderable quantities, as likewiſe alum, vitriol ſulphur, coal, bole, pipe-makers'-clay, marble, and alabaſter, with ſeveral ſalt ſprings, mineral waters, and medicinal baths. The principal rivers, beſides the Rhine and the Maine, are the Lahn, Schwalm, Fulda, Werra, and Diëmel, which five rivers give name to five diſtricts or diviſions: other rivers are the Lumb, Ohm, Eder, Ems, &c. The Heſſians are deſcended from the Catti. In the year 902 there were counts of Heſſe; one of them became king of Germany. In the year 1292, Heſſe became a principality of the empire, though it inſenſibly afterwards came to be commonly termed a landgraviate. The territories were all united under Philip the Generous, from whom all the modern landgraves are deſcended. In his will he divided his dominions among four ſons, the eldeſt had half; from him deſcended the houſe of Heſſe Caſſel; the youngeſt received half one quarter part, and was the founder of the houſe of Heſſe Darmſtadt. The two other brothers dying without heirs, their territories were divided between the two ſurviving branches, but this diviſion occaſioned long diſputes, and many parts are yet undivided. The rank between the two landgraves is alternate. Thus in Heſſe are two ſovereign families, namely Caſſel and Darmſtadt, between whom all the Heſſian territories are divided, but ſeveral articles of ſovereignty have continued in common. The right of primogeniture has been introduced, and confirmed by the emperors. In both houſes are princes appenaged; thoſe of Heſſe Caſſel are Heſſe Philippſthal, and Rothenburg, or Rhinfels. Heſſe Homburg is the only appenage of Heſſe Darmſtadt. The annual revenue of Heſſe Caſſel is eſtimated at about 1,200,000 rixdollars. Thoſe of Darmſtadt at 600,000. The Roman month for Caſſel is 1096 florins, 45 kruitzers, and its tax to the Imperial chamber 472 rixdollars, 55 kruitzers, beſides 25 rixdollars, 79 kruitzers for the county of Catzenelnbogen. The aſſeſſment for Heſſe Darmſtadt is 663 florins, and 313 rixdollars to the chamber of Wetzlar. The military eſtabliſhment for Caſſel conſiſts of three regiments of foot-guards, ten regiments of infantry, a regiment of life-guards, a regiment of gens-d'armes, three regiments of cavalry, two of dragoons, a corps of huſſars, a corps of chaſſeurs, another of artillery, and ſeven regiments in garriſon. That of Darmſtadt is compoſed of life guards, a regiment of foot-guards, two ſquadrons of dragoons, two regiments of infantry, and four battalions of militia. Heſſe is divided into Upper and Lower, and ſubdivided into five diſtricts, which take their names from rivers, as before obſerved. The principal town of Lower Heſſe is Caſſel, and Marburg is the capital of Upper Heſſe.

HEXHAM, a town of England, in the county of Northumberland, ſituated near a ſmall ſtream called Hexhold, or Hextold, near the Tyne, ſuppoſed to have been a Roman ſtation. It was formerly a city, and erected into a biſhopric in the year 675, by king Egfrid, but the country being continually invaded and plundered by the Danes, in the year 854, the ſee was united to Lindisfarn, at Cheſter-le-Street, and continued with Durham till the reign of Henry I. when it was united to York. The cathedral church was built by workmen brought from Italy; the preſent church bears conſiderable marks of grandeur, in the Saxon ſtyle. A monaſtery was founded here in the beginning of the 12th century, and endowed with great privileges and liberties, ſo expenſive as to be erected into a county palatinate, in the reign of Henry VIII. The church had the privilege of a ſanctuary till the Reformation, and the fridſtol, or ſtool of peace, is ſtill remaining. The extent of the privilege was marked by a croſs, at a mile diſtance each way. Here are two markets weekly, on Tueſday and Saturday. The number of inhabitants is about 2000. The chief manufactures are tanning leather, ſhoes, and gloves. In the 9th century this town ſuffered frequently from the Danes. In the year 1296 and 1346, it was pillaged and deſtroyed by the Scots. In the year 1463, a battle was fought here between the armies of the houſe of Lancaſter and York; the former, commanded by the duke of Somerſet, the latter by lord Montague. The Yorkiſts obtained a complete victory, the duke of Somerſet and many other noblemen were taken, and almoſt immediately beheaded; king Henry, with his queen and ſon, who were with the army, eſcaped to Scotland: 22 miles W. HIERES, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Var, formerly a ſea-port town, where pilgrims bound for the Holy Land uſed to embark, but the ſea is now retired to a conſiderable diſtance from the town. It is ſituated at the ſide of a hill, in a delightful country, where is a perpetual ſpring, it is ſurrounded by the moſt beautiful gardens, in which is found the beſt fruit of France; oranges, citrons, and pomegranates grow in the open air. Near the town are large ſalt works, made partly from the waters of the ſea, and partly from a ſalt lake, near the town. The exhalations from the lake render the air frequently malignant, but this evil has been remedied by a canal cut from the lake to the ſea. The Gulf of Hieres, between the town and the iſland ſo called, is a famous road for veſſels, with good anchoring ground, and ſufficient depth of water: 3 leagues E. Toulon, and 6 S. The greateſt part of the dioceſe conſiſts of good land, proper for tillage, producing large quantities of corn, flax, hops, and legumes; but the breed of cattle, horſes, ſheep, and ſwine, is only ſufficient for the conſumption of the inhabitants. The ſouth part is hilly, but for the moſt part covered with timber, oak, beech, aſh, and birch, and ſuch of the mountains as are bare of wood contain mines of iron ore. In this part, alſo are ſome ſalt works, but not ſufficient to ſupply all the demands of the dioceſe. The principal rivers are the Leine, Innerſee, and Ocker: the dioceſe contains 12 towns and 248 villages. The biſhopric of Hildeſheim was founded in the year 822, by the emperor Charlemagne. In the year 1519, biſhop John, with an armed force, attacked the dukes of Brunſwick and Luneburg, but in the year 1521, being put under the bann of the empire, the dukes took the beſt part of his territories from him, leaving him only the cathedral, with a few bailiwicks, under the title of the leſſer biſhopric. In the year 1643, moſt of theſe poſſeſſions were reſtored to Ferdinand, the then biſhop. The inhabitants are partly Lutherans and partly Roman Catholics. The matricular aſſeſſment for the biſhopric is 536 florins; to the chamber of Wetzlar the ſee pays 72 rixdollars 38¾ kruitzers. The principal towns are Hildeſheim and Peina.

HINDOO KHO, or Indian Caucaſus, part of a long ridge of mountains in Aſia, which ſeparates Cabul from Balk.

HINDOOSTAN, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by the mountains of Tartary and Thibet, on the eaſt by the countries of Aſſam, Meckley, and Aracan, on the ſouth by the ſea, and on the weſt by the river Indus, or Sinde. But, ſtrictly ſpeaking, the name Hindooſtan ſhould only be applied to the part which lies to the north of the 21ſt and 22nd degrees of latitude; the Nerbudda river being the ſouthern boundary, as far as it goes, while Bengal and Bahar bound the ſouth elſewhere. The country in the ſouth ſide of this line is called by the general name of Deccan; but this diviſion is not generally followed, and the term Hindooſtan is applied to the whole region, as well as to Hindooſtan Proper. Hindooſtan Proper, in the opinion of Major Rennel, is an extent about equal to France, Germany, Bohemia, Hungary, Swiſſerland, Italy, and the Netherlands, collectively, while the Deccan and peninſula are about equal to the Britiſh iſlands, Spain, and European Turkey. The words Hindooſtan and India are originally Perſian. This country was but little known to the ancients; it was invaded, but not conquered by Alexander the Great.

The Arabians penetrated into India under the calif Valid, and the Arabian princes founded an empire, which extended to the Ganges. In 1155, this empire was uſurped by the Ghaurs, who were diſpoſſeſſed in their turn by a dynaſty of Turkiſh princes. In the year 1398, a ſultan, named Mahmoud, reigned here, under the protection of two of his generals, who had placed him on his throne. At this time Hindooſtan was invaded by Timur Bek, or Tamerlane, who paſſed the Indus with his army, conquered the provinces which he paſſed through, and arrived at Dehli through rivers of blood. Mahmoud was vanquiſhed, Dehli was deſtroyed, and all Hindooſtan ſubmitted; but of all this vaſt and rich conqueſt, the deſcendants of Timur Bek enjoyed only the northern part. Babr, one of his deſcendants, invaded Hindooſtan in the year 1498, at that time divided into ſeveral independent kingdoms and ſtates; his firſt attempts were unſucceſsful, but afterwards he ſubdued the greater part, except the Deccan, Guzerat, and Bengal. His ſon, Hemayun, ſubdued Bengal. At his death, which happened at Dehli, his ſon, Akbar, was proclaimed emperor, in 1556, who encreaſed his empire by conqueſt, and enriched it by commerce. Aurengzeb conquered Bengal, Viſiapour, the Carnatic, and Golconda. In the year 1739, in the reign of Mohammed Shah, Hindooſtan was invaded by Tahmaſp Kuli Khan, otherwiſe called Nadir Shah, king of Perſia, which put an end to the great ſplendour of the Mogul empire. Beſides the great riches which are ſaid to have amounted to upwards of 230 millions ſterling, which he ſeized on during his reſidence at Dehli, all the provinces weſt of the Sinde were ſurrendered to the conqueror. Mohammed was reinſtated indeed in his dominions, but without power to enforce obedience to his commands. Several of the provinces revolted; Achmet Abdallah, treaſurer to Nadir Shah, who was aſſaſſinated in 1747, found means to ſecrete vaſt ſums of money, and erected an independent kingdom, of which Candahar was the capital. At preſent, the empire of Hindooſtan is confined to the city of Dehli and a ſmall country round it, and, perhaps, the protection of the Engliſh is the greateſt ſupport of the deſcendant of Timur Bek. Before the invaſion of Nadir Shah, the government was deſpotic; there were no permanent councils; three or four miniſters, raiſed or depoſed according to the caprice of their maſter, were the depoſitaries of his power. Hindooſtan is inhabited by people of different kinds, as the Hindoos, the Patans, or Afghans, the Baluchis, the Parſis, and the Mongols, or Tartars, beſides foreigners, particularly Jews and Chriſtians. All, excepting the Hindoos, who are the ancient inhabitants, have ſettled there by conqueſt or accident, having been induced by commerce, or compelled by war and perſecution, to abandon their native countries. The Hindoos are the ancient occupants; and though ſubject to the Mongols, ſtill preſerve the ſuperiority in number. The Parſis are the deſcendants of the ancient Perſians, who worſhipped the fire. Theſe, to avoid the perſecution of the Mohammedans, on their firſt conqueſt of Perſia, fled in great numbers by the ſea to India; where they ſettled on the weſtern peninſula, chiefly about Surat, and there they ſtill remain. The Patans were thoſe from whom the Mongols conquered Hindooſtan, and are moſt likely the deſcendants of thoſe Mohammedans, Turks, Perſians, and Arabs, who, about the year 1000, firſt became maſters of Dehli and Moultan, under Sultan Mahmud Gazni. Theſe people are ſtill very numerous throughout Hindooſtan, and eſpecially in the northweſt parts beyond the Sinde towards Cabul, Ghizni, and Candahar; from whence, in all probability, they originally came. They ſtill inhabit the ſame provinces of the Perſian empire, where they are chiefly known by the name of Afghans: they have a great averſion to the Mongols for having diſpoſſeſſed them of their territories, and being high-ſpirited, ſtill entertain hopes of recovering from them what they ſeized. The meaneſt of them frequently uſe this expreſſion, "let me never be king of Dehli, if it be not ſo." Theſe people are fierce and warlike. They now poſſeſs many of the mountainous parts; where ſome have erected petty ſovereignties, like the rajahs. They have from time to time given great uneaſineſſes to the Mogols, and had no ſmall ſhare in the revolution brought about in that empire by Nadir Shah. The Baluchi are another nation, who poſſeſs ſeveral parts of Hindooſtan to the weſt of the Sinde, or Indus; they are ſpread over all the large province of Mecran and the neighbouring parts. They are a barbarous people, addicted to rapine, and pay little obedience to the monarchs to whom they are ſubject. The Moguls, or Jagatays, are the deſcendants of the army of Timur Bek, who have held chief rule in India from that time. Among the Chriſtians, the Portugueſe were the firſt to eſtabliſh themſelves on the continent and in the iſlands chiefly by force, but were afterwards almoſt every where diſpoſſeſſed by the Dutch. The ſettlements obtained by the Engliſh, French, and Danes, have chiefly been formed by treaty with the inhabitants, or grants from the princes. Of the ſeveral nations above mentioned, the Hindoos and Parſis are Pagans; but excel all the reſt in modeſt deportment and the practice of virtue. The Patans, Baluchins, and Mogols, are Mahometans. The two firſt given to arms, and of a reſtleſs diſpoſition, ſubject on ſlight occaſions, to revolt, and plunder their neighbours, without diſtinction. However, the Patans and Mogols are pretty ſtrict obſervers of their law and the rules of juſtice, at leaſt among themſelves. In the time of Aurengzeb, the provinces which compoſed the Mogul empire were Delhi, Agra, Agimere, Moultan, Sindy, Lahore, or Punjab, Oude, Allahabad, Bengal, Bahar, Oriſſa, Cabul, Cachimere, Malwa, Guzerat, Berar, Candeiſh, Dowlatabad or Amednagur, Beder, Hydrabad or Golconda, and Viſiapour, all which produced an annual revenue of about 32 millions ſterling. At this time Bengal, the greater part of Bahar, with part of Allahabad, and part of Oriſſa, belong to the Engliſh, who are alſo in poſſeſſion of the northern circars, a jaghire in the Carnatic, Baramahal, Dindigul, and ſome conſiderable countries to the north and ſouth of Calicut, on the coaſt of Malabar, with the iſland and territory of Bombay. Oude is governed by a nabob, in alliance with Great Britain, as likewiſe the eaſtern part of Delhi. Allahabad, Malwa, Dowlatabad, part of Guzerat, Oriſſa, Berar, Agra, Agimere, and Viſiapour, are governed by Mahratta princes, in ſmaller ſtates, chiefly under the name of rajahs: Golconda, Aurungabad, Beder, part of Berar, &c. are ſubject to the ſoubah of the Deccan. Lahore, Moultan, and the weſtern parts of Delhi, are ſubject to the Seiks. The ſouthern parts of the peninſula are the Myſore, the Carnatic, Tanjore, Cochin, Travancore, Madura, Tinevelly, Coimbetore, Canara, and a few ſmaller ſtates ſubject to the king of Myſore. The Carnatic, including Tanjore, Madura, Tinevelly, and Marawars, are Britiſh allies, ſo likewiſe are Cochin and Travancore.

HISPANIOLA, or St. Domingo, an iſland of the Weſt Indies, about 350 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and 110 in breadth, from north to ſouth. This iſland was diſcovered by Columbus, in the year 1491, who called it Hiſpaniola: but giving the name of St. Domingo to a city which he built, in the year 1494, the whole iſland, in proceſs of time, came to be ſo called, as frequently as Hiſpaniola: the Indian name was Hayti. It is ſeparated from Cuba by a ſtrait, called the Windward Paſſage, about twelve leagues in width. Next to Cuba, it is the largeſt iſland in the Weſt Indies, the moſt fertile, and the moſt pleaſant. When firſt diſcovered, it was divided into five kingdoms, and ſome other ſmall independent ſtates. The Spaniards were received at firſt hoſpitably by the natives, but their frequent quarrels, from time to time, ended nearly in their extermination. This being the firſt diſcovery by the Spaniards, it was the centre of their commerce, and was for ſome time a very flouriſhing colony, but after the diſcovery of Peru ſeems to have been neglected. In the middle of the laſt century, the French began to reſort and ſettle on the iſland; the firſt that came were Buccaneers, but theſe were ſome time afterwards followed by others, who became regular planters. The court of France pretended to diſcourage theſe ſettlers, but took no effectual means to prevent them, and in the year 1697, by an article in the treaty of Riſwick, the Spaniards, ceded the north-weſt part of the iſland to the French, containing one of the fineſt territories in the world. The climate, though hot, is healthy, except to new comers. Some of the inhabitants upon it are ſaid to live to the uncommon age of 120. It is continually refreſhed by breezes and rains, and its ſalubrity is likewiſe in a great meaſure owing to the beautiful variety of its ſurface, exhibiting hills and vallies, woods and rivers. It contains foreſts of palms, elms, oaks, pines, beſides ſeveral other woods, not common and hardly known in Europe, and it is generally agreed, that the pine-apples, grapes, oranges, lemons, citrons, limes, dates, apricots, and other fruits have a particular taſte and flavour in Hiſpaniola. As to its products both animal and vegetable, they are pretty much the ſame with thoſe of the other Weſt Indian iſlands, only it is ſaid that the French part of Hiſpaniola, breeds horſes ſufficient to ſupply all the Weſt Indies, beſides innumerable quantities of black cattle. Crocodiles, or alligators infeſt its coaſts and rivers; but they abound, at the ſame time with turtles. Beſides the commodities already mentioned, Hiſpaniola produces great plenty of indigo, cotton, cocoa, coffee, ginger, tobacco, ſalt, wax, honey, and ambergriſe, beſides a variety of drugs and dyers' woods. It is thought that the ſoil is improper for corn; but we learn by the earlieſt accounts of the Spaniards, that the natives with very little trouble raiſed maize, and other Indian grain, and it is imagined that if the French would now apply themſelves to that culture they would ſucceed. The truth is, the population of this iſland bears no proportion to its extent; ſo that the inhabitants cannot ſpare hands for the cultivation of corn grounds. The French are ſaid to to be more numerous upon the iſland than the Spaniards. In the year 1767, the exports from the French part of the iſland, were 72,718,781, pounds weight of raw ſugar, 51,562,013 pounds of white ſugar, 1,769,562, pounds of indigo, 150,000 pounds of cocoa, 12,197,977 pounds of coffee, 2,965,920 pounds of cotton, 8470 packets of hides in the hair, 10,350 tanned hides, 4108 caſks of rum, and 21,104 caſks of molaſſes. Since that time all the plantations are increaſed, thoſe of coffee more than trebled. By the peace lately concluded between Spain and the French republic, the whole of the iſland is ceded to the latter. Long. 68. 45. to 74. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 17. 40. to 20. N.

HITHE, or Hythe, or Eaſt Hithe, a town of England, in the county of Kent, and one of the Cinque Ports; it was formerly a ſeaport, but the harbour is now quite choaked up. In the reign of Henry IV. moſt of the inhabitants of this town were carried off, by a peſtilence, which was ſucceeded by a fire that conſumed two hundred houſes; ſoon after which calamity, five of the ſhips which this town was obliged to fit out, were ſunk at ſea, and a hundred men drowned. The ſurviving inhabitants, diſpirited by theſe calamities, reſolved to leave the place; but the king encouraged them to ſtay, by giving them a temporary releaſe from the ſervice due from the town as a Cinque Port. There is a remarkable pile of dry bones in the town, twenty-eight feet long, and ſix broad, and eight high, ſome very gigantic, and appear, by an inſcription, to be the remains of the Danes and Britons, killed in a battle, near this place, before the Norman conqueſt. Hithe has a fort, which is under the care of a maſter-gunner, and two aſſiſtants. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 7 miles SW. Dover, and 68 SE. London. Long. 1. E. HOLLAND, a celebrated republic of Europe, and principal of the Dutch States, or as they are commonly, though perhaps improperly, called, the Seven United Provinces. Holland is a peninſula, bounded on the north and weſt by the German Ocean, on the eaſt by the Zuyder See and the ſtate of Utrecht, and on the ſouth by the river Meuſe and Brabant. It is divided into North and South. North Holland includes all to the north of Amſterdam. South Holland extends from the ſtate of Zealand and Brabant to the river Ye; the length of the whole, including the iſland of Texel and the iſlands in the Meuſe, is about 90 miles, the breadth is various, from 15 to 48. It contains twenty-nine walled towns, with many others that enjoy municipal privileges, and above 400 villages. Six large cities have ſeats in the States General, viz. Dort, Haerlem, Delft, Leyden, Amſterdam, and Gouda. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 800,000. The ſoil of the country is ſo ſoft and marſhy, that but for the conſtant care in forming ditches and canals, it would be hardly capable of cultivation, ſome part of it lies even lower than the ſea, from which it is ſecured by dykes or dams. The meadow-grounds are rich and great numbers of milch cows are kept by the farmers, and the making of butter and cheeſe is one of their principal occupations; theſe meadows are generally under water in the winter, and the water would continue there at all times, if the inhabitants of the country had not found means to diſcharge them, by mills invented for this purpoſe, into the ditches and canals. The Hollanders are affable, induſtrious, laborious, abſorbed in trade, excellent ſailors, good politicians and lovers of liberty. A free exerciſe of religion is allowed to all perſuaſions except the Roman Catholics; but Calviniſm is the moſt prevailing. This country was anciently inhabited by the Batavians, who derived their origin from the Catti, a people of Germany. Having been obliged to abandon their country on account of civil wars, they came to eſtabliſh themſelves in an iſland, formed by the waters of the Rhine and the Wahal or Leck, and named their country Batavia, or Betuwe, from Batton, the ſon of their king. Theſe people ſerved in the Roman armies in quality of auxiliary troops, and hiſtorians informs us, that ſome of them were at the battle of Pharſalia. They formed the ordinary guard of the emperor Auguſtus. The ſervices which they rendered Germanicus, in Germany, were ſo important that the ſenate gave them the appellation of brothers. They had afterwards a conſiderable ſhare in the conqueſt of Britain, under Plancius and Agricola. They ſtrengthened the party of Galba, and afterwards that of Vitellius, and it was principally to their valour that Julian the apoſtate was indebted for the victory, which he obtained over the Germans, near Straſburg. The name of Holland is by ſome ſaid to be given to it on account of the vaſt and thick foreſts of wood with which it was at one time covered, Holtlant, in German, ſignifying woodland: others are inclined to think that the Normans, who made a deſcent here about the year 836, gave the country this name, founding their opinion on the reſemblance of names found in this country to thoſe in Denmark and Norway, the ancient reſidence of the Normans, as Zealand, Oeland, Schagen, Bergen, &c. On the decline of the Roman empire, the Batavians, or Hollanders, having thrown off their yoke, came under the dominion of the Saxons, and then of the French, under Childeric I. king of France. The Normans and the Danes were the next maſters, from the time of Charlemagne, and ravaged the country three times with fire and ſword: when they were driven away, Charles the Bald, emperor and king of France, erected Holland into a country, in the year 863, in favour of Thierry, duke of Aquitaine, who, five years after, was alſo made count of Zealand, by Louis, king of Germany. In the year 1299, the county of Holland devolved to the counts of Hainaut, and, in 1436, it fell to Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, and afterwards to the emperor Maximilian, whoſe deſcendant, Philip II. king of Spain, was the laſt count of Holland; the ſeven provinces revolting from him, and, after a long ſtruggle, forming an independant republic. The ſtates of the province have the title of the ſtates of Holland and Weſt Frieſeland, and are formed of the nobility and towns. By Weſt Frieſland is to be underſtood North Holland, which is ſometimes ſo called, and not the ſtate or province of Frieſland. The number of the nobility admitted into the aſſembly is not limited, and not always the ſame, they are elected by a majority of votes, and rarely exceed ten. The towns who have a right to ſend deputies were originally ſix, at preſent they are eighteen, of which ſeven are in North Holland, and eleven in South Holland. The number of deputies ſent by each town is not fixed. In the year 1581, the Hague was appointed to be the place for the aſſembly of the ſtates, when William of Naſſau, prince of Orange, was acknowledged by the ſtates-general of the United Provinces, as the chief of their republic, and moſt certainly to him they were chiefly indebted for their eſtabliſhment when they threw off their allegiance to Spain. He was aſſaſſinated at Delft, on the 10th of July, 1584. Maurice of Naſſau, ſucceeded his father, and in conſideration of his virtue and valour, was made governor or ſtadtholder, of Holland, Zealand, and Utrecht. William Henry of Naſſau, the grandſon of Frederic Henry, brother of Maurice, obtained the three offices of ſtadtholder, captain, and admiral general, with a grant of the ſame to his deſcendant for ever. In the year 1677, this prince eſpouſed Margaret daughter of James II. king of England, and in 1689, was crowned king at Weſtminſter. In the preſent diſputes on the French revolution, Holland at firſt appeared hoſtile to the new republic, but never heartily to have co-operated with the allies. The ſtadtholder was moſt probably influenced by Pruſſia and England; but a party more powerful than his own were his enemies, and on the invaſion of Holland by the French, in the begining of the year 1795, the ſtadtholder, with his family, thought it prudent to take refuge in England. Such are the ways of Providence! in the year 1688, a prince of Orange came to England to obtain a crown, and in the year 1795, a prince of Orange fled hither for protection.

HOLLAND, a diſtrict of England, in the county of Lincoln, ſituated in the ſouth-eaſt part, with the German Sea on the eaſt, and the counties of Cambridge, Northampton, and Norfolk on the ſouth, divided into Upper and Lower, both of which conſiſt of fens, bogs, and marſhes, drained and interſected in various ways by ditches and canals. The air is unwholſome, but made much better in parts which are well drained; the water is brackiſh, ſo that in moſt places rain water is preſerved in reſervoirs for family uſe; and in the ſummer vaſt ſwarms of inſects fill the air, and prove exceedingly offenſive. The land, after being drained, forms good paſture and meadow land, and, if cultivated, produces good crops of corn. Large flocks of geeſe are bred, and form a conſiderable article of commerce, as well for their quills and feathers as for the birds themſelves, great numbers of which are driven to the London markets, there are alſo many large decoys for wild ducks, widgeons, &c. The principal tows are Boſton, Spalding, Crowland, and Holbeach.

HOLLAND (New), the largeſt iſland in the world, ſituated in the Indian Ocean, long ſuppoſed to be part of a vaſt ſouthern continent; equal, or nearly equal, in ſize to the habitable part of Europe, firſt diſcovered in the beginning of the 17th century, and then called Terra Auſtralis Incognita. In the year 1628, the weſtern part was diſcovered by ſome veſſels belonging to the Dutch Eaſt India company, and called De Witt's Land, from the name of the commodore who commanded the ſquadron. In the year 1629, a Dutch ſhip, commanded by captain Pelſart, was wrecked on this coaſt. In the year 1642, captain Taſman was ſent by the Dutch Eaſt India company to ſurvey the coaſt, who viſited the ſouthern part, which he called Anthony Van Diemen's Land, to diſtinguiſh it from Diemen's Land on the north coaſt, diſcovered in the year 1618. In the year 1688, captain Dampier fell in with this iſland, and viſited it again in 1699. He deſcribes the inhabitants as the moſt miſerable people in the world, without houſes, and without clothes; black, tall, thin, ſtrait-bodied with ſmall limbs, great heads, and heavy brows. Their eye-lids are always half cloſed to keep the flies out of their eyes, which are here ſo troubleſome that no fanning will drive them away from the face, and without the aſſiſtance of both hands to keep them off, they will fill one's noſtrils and mouth too, if the lips are not ſhut cloſe; ſo that from their infancy being thus annoyed with thoſe inſects, they never open their eyes like other people, and conſequently cannot ſee far, unleſs they hold up their heads as if they were looking at ſomething over them. They have great bottle-noſes, pretty full lips, and wide mouths. The two fore-teeth of their upper jaws are wanting in all of them, men and women, old and young, neither have they any beards. They are long viſaged, and of a very unpleaſant aſpect, having no one graceful feature in their faces. Some other navigators alſo viſited this iſland, but none after the ſecond voyage of Dampier, till the year 1770, when the eaſt coaſt was viſited and explored by captain Cook, who ſpent four months in exploring a coaſt of 2000 miles in length. He took poſſeſſion of this eaſtern coaſt in the name of the king of Great Britain, and gave it the name of New South Wales. In the year 1773, capt. HOLSTEIN (Duchy of), a country of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony. Including the lordſhip of Pinneberg, it is bounded on the north by the duchy of Sleſwick and the Baltic, on the eaſt by the Baltic, on the ſouth by the duchy of Lauenberg, the territories of Lubeck, and Hamburg and the Elbe, and on the weſt by the Elbe and the German Sea; about 70 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and 48 in breadth from north to ſouth. Its ſituation between the Baltic and the German Ocean expoſes it to frequent ſtorms, which occaſions heavy expences to the land-owners, in raiſing dykes to prevent inundations, eſpecially in the diſtricts bordering on the German Sea and the Elbe. Theſe diſtricts conſiſt of excellent marſh land, producing wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, and rape-ſeed, in great plenty. The meadows and paſtures feed great numbers of cattle, both milch kine and to be fatted for the butcher. The other parts of the country are ſtill more fertile. Holſtein is divided into four provinces, namely, Holſtein Proper, Stormar, Ditmarſen, and Wagria. The three firſt of theſe were formerly called Nordalbingia, or Saxony beyond the Elbe. The Saxons of this country were a free people, till they were ſubdued by Charlemagne, who tranſported 10,000 families into Brabant, Flanders, and Holland. A treaty was made between this prince and the king of Denmark, which fixed the river Eider as the common boundary of their two empires. The country on the ſouth of the river was called the Marche, and a marggrave appointed to defend it. Lothario, duke of Saxony, who afterwards became emperor, erected Holſtein Proper and Stormar into a county, in favour of the count of Scauenburg, in the year 1106; whoſe ſon, Adolphus II. incorporated Wagria with Holſtein, and peopled his eſtates with ſtrangers from Holland and Weſtphalia. The territories were afterwards divided into ſeparate principalities. One of the princes who reigned here obtained from the king of Denmark the inveſtiture of Sleſwick. This branch became extinct, and the people elected Chriſtian I. king of Denmark, who became duke of Sleſwick, and count of Holſtein; which was ſoon after erected into a duchy. His poſterity reigned here in the ſame manner as over Denmark. The branch of Holſtein Gottorpf, founded by the ſecond ſon of king Frederic I. was often diſturbed by that which reigned in Denmark, and in the year 1720, the reigning prince was entirely diſpoſſeſſed of his dominions. This prince had eſpouſed Ann, the eldeſt daughter of Peter I. emperor of Ruſſia. In the year 1743, his ſon, Charles Ulric, was by his mother's ſiſter, Elizabeth, empreſs of Ruſſia, declared grand duke of Ruſſia, and took the name of Peter Feodorowitz. The king of Denmark, as duke of Holſtein Gluckſtadt, has a ſeat and voice in the diet of the empire in the college of princes, ſo alſo has the emperor, or empreſs of Ruſſia, for Holſtein Gottorpf. The aſſeſſment of the whole duchy, in the matricula of the empire, is 800 florins. Holſtein Gluckſtadt pays to the imperial chamber 189 rixdollars, 31 kruitzers, and Holſtein Gottorpf the ſame. The king of Denmark appoints a governor over his part of Holſtein, who generally reſides at Gluckſtadt. The regency court for Ruſſian Holſtein is held at Kiel. The principal trading towns are Altona, Gluckſtadt, and Kiel. The exports of Holſtein are wheat, barley, malt, ſtarch, buck-wheat, peas, beans, rape-ſeed, horned cattle, ſheep, rams, ſwine, horſes, poultry, butter, cheeſe, veniſon, and fiſh.

continue there at all times, if the inhabitants of the country had not found means to diſcharge them, by mills invented for this purpoſe, into the ditches and canals. The Hollanders are affable, induſtrious, laborious, abſorbed in trade, excellent ſailors, good politicians and lovers of liberty. A free exerciſe of religion is allowed to all perſuaſions except the Roman Catholics; but Calviniſm is the moſt prevailing. This country was anciently inhabited by the Batavians, who derived their origin from the Catti, a people of Germany. Having been obliged to abandon their country on account of civil wars, they came to eſtabliſh themſelves in an iſland, formed by the waters of the Rhine and the Wahal or Leck, and named their country Batavia, or Betuwe, from Batton, the ſon of their king. Theſe people ſerved in the Roman armies in quality of auxiliary troops, and hiſtorians informs us, that ſome of them were at the battle of Pharſalia. They formed the ordinary guard of the emperor Auguſtus. The ſervices which they rendered Germanicus, in Germany, were ſo important that the ſenate gave them the appellation of brothers. They had afterwards a conſiderable ſhare in the conqueſt of Britain, under Plancius and Agricola. They ſtrengthened the party of Galba, and afterwards that of Vitellius, and it was principally to their valour that Julian the apoſtate was indebted for the victory, which he obtained over the Germans, near Straſburg. The name of Holland is by ſome ſaid to be given to it on account of the vaſt and thick foreſts of wood with which it was at one time covered, Holtlant, in German, ſignifying woodland: others are inclined to think that the Normans, who made a deſcent here about the year 836, gave the country this name, founding their opinion on the reſemblance of names found in this country to thoſe in Denmark and Norway, the ancient reſidence of the Normans, as Zealand, Oeland, Schagen, Bergen, &c. On the decline of the Roman empire, the Batavians, or Hollanders, having thrown off their yoke, came under the dominion of the Saxons, and then of the French, under Childeric I. king of France. The Normans and the Danes were the next maſters, from the time of Charlemagne, and ravaged the country three times with fire and ſword: when they were driven away, Charles the Bald, emperor and king of France, erected Holland into a country, in the year 863, in favour of Thierry, duke of Aquitaine, who, five years after, was alſo made count of Zealand, by Louis, king of Germany. In the year 1299, the county of Holland devolved to the counts of Hainaut, and, in 1436, it fell to Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, and afterwards to the emperor Maximilian, whoſe deſcendant, Philip II. king of Spain, was the laſt count of Holland; the ſeven provinces revolting from him, and, after a long ſtruggle, forming an independant republic. The ſtates of the province have the title of the ſtates of Holland and Weſt Frieſeland, and are formed of the nobility and towns. By Weſt Frieſland is to be underſtood North Holland, which is ſometimes ſo called, and not the ſtate or province of Frieſland. The number of the nobility admitted into the aſſembly is not limited, and not always the ſame, they are elected by a majority of votes, and rarely exceed ten. The towns who have a right to ſend deputies were originally ſix, at preſent they are eighteen, of which ſeven are in North Holland, and eleven in South Holland. The number of deputies ſent by each town is not fixed. In the year 1581, the Hague was appointed to be the place for the aſſembly of the ſtates, when William of Naſſau, prince of Orange, was acknowledged by the ſtates-general of the United Provinces, as the chief of their republic, and moſt certainly to him they were chiefly indebted for their eſtabliſhment when they threw off their allegiance to Spain. He was aſſaſſinated at Delft, on the 10th of July, 1584. Maurice of Naſſau, ſucceeded his father, and in conſideration of his virtue and valour, was made governor or ſtadtholder, of Holland, Zealand, and Utrecht. William Henry of Naſſau, the grandſon of Frederic Henry, brother of Maurice, obtained the three offices of ſtadtholder, captain, and admiral general, with a grant of the ſame to his deſcendant for ever. In the year 1677, this prince eſpouſed Margaret daughter of James II. king of England, and in 1689, was crowned king at Weſtminſter. HOLSTEIN (Duchy of), a country of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony. Including the lordſhip of Pinneberg, it is bounded on the north by the duchy of Sleſwick and the Baltic, on the eaſt by the Baltic, on the ſouth by the duchy of Lauenberg, the territories of Lubeck, and Hamburg and the Elbe, and on the weſt by the Elbe and the German Sea; about 70 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and 48 in breadth from north to ſouth. Its ſituation between the Baltic and the German Ocean expoſes it to frequent ſtorms, which occaſions heavy expences to the land-owners, in raiſing dykes to prevent inundations, eſpecially in the diſtricts bordering on the German Sea and the Elbe. Theſe diſtricts conſiſt of excellent marſh land, producing wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, and rape-ſeed, in great plenty. The meadows and paſtures feed great numbers of cattle, both milch kine and to be fatted for the butcher. The other parts of the country are ſtill more fertile. Holſtein is divided into four provinces, namely, Holſtein Proper, Stormar, Ditmarſen, and Wagria. The three firſt of theſe were formerly called Nordalbingia, or Saxony beyond the Elbe. The Saxons of this country were a free people, till they were ſubdued by Charlemagne, who tranſported 10,000 families into Brabant, Flanders, and Holland. A treaty was made between this prince and the king of Denmark, which fixed the river Eider as the common boundary of their two empires. The country on the ſouth of the river was called the Marche, and a marggrave appointed to defend it. Lothario, duke of Saxony, who afterwards became emperor, erected Holſtein Proper and Stormar into a county, in favour of the count of Scauenburg, in the year 1106; whoſe ſon, Adolphus II. incorporated Wagria with Holſtein, and peopled his eſtates with ſtrangers from Holland and Weſtphalia. The territories were afterwards divided into ſeparate principalities. One of the princes who reigned here obtained from the king of Denmark the inveſtiture of Sleſwick. This branch became extinct, and the people elected Chriſtian I. king of Denmark, who became duke of Sleſwick, and count of Holſtein; which was ſoon after erected into a duchy. His poſterity reigned here in the ſame manner as over Denmark. The branch of Holſtein Gottorpf, founded by the ſecond ſon of king Frederic I. was often diſturbed by that which reigned in Denmark, and in the year 1720, the reigning prince was entirely diſpoſſeſſed of his dominions. This prince had eſpouſed Ann, the eldeſt daughter of Peter I. emperor of Ruſſia. In the year 1743, his ſon, Charles Ulric, was by his mother's ſiſter, Elizabeth, empreſs of Ruſſia, declared grand duke of Ruſſia, and took the name of Peter Feodorowitz. The king of Denmark, as duke of Holſtein Gluckſtadt, has a ſeat and voice in the diet of the empire in the college of princes, ſo alſo has the emperor, or empreſs of Ruſſia, for Holſtein Gottorpf. The aſſeſſment of the whole duchy, in the matricula of the empire, is 800 florins. Holſtein Gluckſtadt pays to the imperial chamber 189 rixdollars, 31 kruitzers, and Holſtein Gottorpf the ſame. The king of Denmark appoints a governor over his part of Holſtein, who generally reſides at Gluckſtadt. The regency court for Ruſſian Holſtein is held at Kiel. The principal trading towns are Altona, Gluckſtadt, and Kiel. The exports of Holſtein are wheat, barley, malt, ſtarch, buck-wheat, peas, beans, rape-ſeed, horned cattle, ſheep, rams, ſwine, horſes, poultry, butter, cheeſe, veniſon, and fiſh.

HOTTENTOTS (Country of), a large territory of Africa, and part of that which goes by the name of Caffraria, bounded on the north by countries unknown, on the ſouth-eaſt, ſouth and weſt, by the ſea. The coaſt is mountainous, and abounds in bays and capes. There are no conſiderable kingdoms throughout this large extent of country, the whole being inhabited by different nations or tribes of Hottentots, governed by different honquers, or chiefs, who have no fixed reſidence, living like the Arabs, in huts or portable houſes, and removing their kraals, or villages, whenever the paſture becomes too bare for the ſubſiſtence of their cattle, and upon the natural or violent death of an inhabitant. The known nations are the Kochaquan, Suſſaquan, Odiquan, Chirigriquan, Greater and Leſſer Namaquan, Attaquan, Heſſaquan, Sonquan, Dunquan, Damaquan, Gauros or Gouriquan, Houteniquan, Chamtover, and Heikom. They no longer compoſe, as formerly, one nation, uniform in their manners, cuſtoms, and purſuits. The eſtabliſhment of the Dutch colony was a fatal epoch, which diſunited them all, and occaſioned thoſe differences by which they are at preſent diſtinguiſhed. In 1652, when Riebeck, the ſurgeon, on his return from India, opened the eyes of the directors of the company, reſpecting the importance of an eſtabliſhment at the Cape, they wiſely thought that ſuch an enterpriſe could not be better executed than by the genius which had planned it. Furniſhed, therefore, with ample powers, and being provided with proviſions, and every thing that could contribute to the ſucceſs of the project, Riebeck ſoon arrived at Table Bay. Like an able politician, and a ſkilful negociator, he employed every method in his power to ſecure the friendſhip of the Hottentots; and he covered with honey the edge of the poiſoned bowl. Gained over by powerful allurements, theſe ſavages, the unlimited maſters of all this part of Africa, did not perceive how many of their rights, and how much authority, repoſe and happineſs, this guilty profanation deprived them of. Indolent by nature, true citizens of the world, and little addicted to agriculture, they were not uneaſy that ſtrangers ſhould ſeize on a ſmall corner of uſeleſs land, which was often uninhabited. They thought that whether a little farther or a little nearer, it was of no importance where their flocks, the only riches worthy of engaging their attention, ſought for their food, provided they could find it. The avaricious policy of the Dutch had a view of great hopes from ſo peaceful a beginning; and as it is readier, and knows better than any other to embrace the advantages offered it by fortune, it did not fail to finiſh the work, by holding out two very ſeducing allurements to the Hottentots—tobacco and ſtrong liquors. From that moment theſe unhappy ſavages bid adieu to their liberty, and to that pride which mankind inherit from nature. Attracted by theſe two baits, they approached as near as they could to the ſource from which they received them; whilſt the Dutch, who for a pipe of tobacco, or a glaſs of brandy, could procure an ox, paid every attention in their power to ſuch valuable neighbours. The colony inſenſibly increaſing, and acquiring more ſtrength, that formidable power which dictated laws to all this part of Africa, and removed to a great diſtance every thing that attempted to oppoſe its eager ambition, was ſeen to riſe on foundations that could no longer be ſhaken. The fame of its proſperity was ſoon ſpread, and drew thither every day, a number of new ſettlers. It may be eaſily judged that according to the uſual practice, founded upon a logic which deſtroys the laws of property ſo ſacred and ſo reſpectable, the will of the ſtronger party was a ſufficient title for it to extend its poſſeſſions. The Dutch ſeized indiſcriminately at ſeveral times, and never without having occaſion for them, on all the lands which goverment, or individuals favoured by government, thought proper, or found convenient. The Hottentots, thus confined, preſſed, and haraſſed on all ſides, divided themſelves, and purſued plans entirely oppoſite. Thoſe who were ſtill intereſted in the preſervation of their flocks, penetrated among the mountains towards the north and north-eaſt; but theſe were the fewer number. The reſt, ruined by a few glaſſes of brandy, and a few rolls of tobacco, impoveriſhed and ſtripped of every thing, did not think of quitting the country; but abſolutely renouncing their manners as well as their ancient and happy condition, of which they have no remembrance at preſent, they baſely ſold their ſervices to the whites, who of ſubmiſſive ſtrangers, having ſuddenly become haughty maſters, and enterpriſing planters, have not ſufficient hands to turn to advantage their immenſe riches; and who eaſe themſelves of the painful and multiplied labours requiſite on their plantations, by laying them upon theſe unfortunate Hottentots, more and more degenerated and corrupted. A few paltry and miſerable hordes have indeed eſtabliſhed themſelves, and live as they can, in different cantons of the colony; but they have not even the power of chooſing their own chief. As they are in the diſtrict of government, and under its authority, the right of naming him belongs entirely to the governor. The perſon whom he chooſes repairs to the town, and receives a large cane, the knob of which is copper: after which a creſcent or gorget, formed of the ſame metal, upon which is engraven in large letters, the word capitein, is put round his neck, as a badge of his dignity. From that moment his melancholy horde, which for a long time has loſt its national name, aſſumes that of the new chief, who has been ſet over it. They will then ſay, for example, the horde of captain Kees, &c. who becomes to the governor a new creature, a new ſpy, and a new ſlave, and to his own countrymen, a new tyrant. The governor himſelf is never perſonally acquainted with thoſe whom he appoints. It is generally the planter neareſt the horde who ſolicits and determines the nomination for one of his own creatures; becauſe he truſts that a low perſon whom he has in this manner patronized, will not be ungrateful, and that he will have all his vaſſals ready at his ſervice, when neceſſity may require. Thus, without any preliminary information, and even without any regard to juſtice, a helpleſs and feeble horde are obliged to receive laws from a man often incapable of commanding them; and thus does the intereſt of one individual prevail over the general good, both in great and little affairs: and it is thus that the revolutions of a republic, and the puerile election of the ſyndic of a village, proceeding from the ſame principles, are equally ſimilar in their effects. Such, in general, are the Hottentots known under the name of the Hottentots of the Cape, or Hottentots of the Colonies, but we muſt not confound with them the ſavage Hottentots, who, by way of deriſion, are called the Jackal-Hottentots; and who, far removed from the arbitrary Dutch government, ſtill preſerve in the deſert which they inhabit all the purity of their primitive manners. Among the different tribes of Hottentots, the women wear two or three coverings formed of a ſkin, and faſtened about their bodies like an apron; the outermoſt, which is the largeſt, meaſuring from ſeven inches to twelve. This is frequently adorned with glaſs beads in different forms. All theſe coverings are well ſmeared with greaſe. The garment uſually worn for covering the bodies, is a ſheep ſkin with the wool. This pelliſe, or karoſs, is tied forwards over the breaſt. If the weather is not cold, they let it hang looſe over their ſhoulders, in a careleſs manner when it reaches down to the calves of their legs, leaving the lower part of their breaſt, ſtomach, and fore part of the legs and thighs bare; but in rainy and cold weather they wrap it round them; ſo that the fore part of the body likewiſe, is in ſome meaſure covered with it, as far as below the knees. That which is uſed by the women for the ſame purpoſe, does not differ from thoſe uſed by the men in any other reſpect, than that the women have a peak to their karoſſes, which they turn up, forming with it a hood or little pouch, with the hairy ſide inwards. In this they carry their little children. The men in general wear no peculiar covering on their heads. Thoſe who live neareſt to the coloniſts, wear European hats, ſlouched all round, or elſe with one ſide turned up. The women frequently go bareheaded; when they cover their heads, it is with a cap in the form of a ſhort truncated cone, without any ſeam, made of ſome animal's ſtomach, and is as black as ſoot, mixed up with fat, can make it. Over this cap they ſometimes wear another ornament, conſiſting of an oval wreath, made of buffaloe's hide, with the brown hair outwards. Both the rims of this wreath, as well the lower one on which it reſts, as the upper one, are always ſmooth and even; each of them ſet with a row of ſmall ſhells, to the number of more than thirty, in ſuch a manner, that being placed quite cloſe to each other, their beautiful white enamel, together with their mouths, is turned outwards. Neither the ears or noſes of the Hottentots are adorned with any pendant or other ornaments. The necks of the men are bare, but thoſe of the women are decorated with a ſtrip of undreſſed leather, upon which are ſtrung eight or ten ſhells. Another ornament in uſe with both ſexes, is rings on their arms and legs. Moſt of theſe rings are made of thick leather ſtraps, generally cut in a circular ſhape, which by being beat and held over the fire, are rendered tough enough to retain the curvature that is given them. It is theſe rings that, according to Sparman, have given riſe to the almoſt univerſally received notion, that the Hottentots wrap guts about their legs, in order to eat them occaſionally. The men wear from one to five or ſix of theſe rings on their arms, juſt above their wriſt, but ſeldom any on their legs. The matrons of a higher rank, frequently have a conſiderable number of them both on their arms and legs, eſpecially on the latter, ſo that they are covered with them from the feet up to their knees. Theſe rings are of various thickneſs, viz. ſometimes of that of a gooſe quill, and ſometimes two or three times that ſize. Now and then they are made of pieces of leather, forming one entire ring, ſo that the arms and feet muſt be put through them, when the wearer wiſhes to put them on. Rings of iron and copper, but eſpecially of braſs, of the ſize of a gooſe quill, are conſidered as genteeler, and more valuable than thoſe made of leather. They ſeldom wear any ſhoes. The Hottentots who live within the boundaries of the Dutch colonies, ſeldom make uſe of any weapons. Here and there, indeed, a man will furniſh himſelf with a javelin, by way of defence againſt the wolves; this is called haſſagai. Their habitations are as ſimple as their dreſs, and equally adapted to the wandering paſtoral life they lead in thoſe parts. In fact, they ſcarcely merit any other name than that of huts; though they are ſufficient for the Hottentot's wants and deſires: who may therefore be conſidered as happy men, in being able in this point likewiſe ſo eaſily to ſatisfy them. Every hut is diſpoſed in the following manner: they are of a circular form, reſembling a round beehive or vault. The ground plot is from eighteen to twenty-four feet in diameter. The higheſt of them are ſo low, that a middle-ſized man can ſcarcely ſtand upright. From the ſituation of their fire-place, which is in the centre, the Hottentots likewiſe have this advantage, that when they ſit or lie in a circle round the fire, the whole company equally enjoy the benefit of its warmth. The door, which is low, is the only place that lets in the daylight; and at the ſame time the only outſet that is left for the ſmoke. The frame of this arched roof is compoſed of ſlender rods or ſprays of trees. Theſe rods being previouſly bent into a proper form, are laid, either whole or pieced, ſome parallel with each other, others croſſwiſe; they are then ſtrengthened by binding others round them, in a circular form, with withies. Large mats are then laid very neatly over this lattice work, ſo as perfectly to cover the whole. The aperture which is left for the door, is cloſed, whenever there is occaſion for it, with a ſkin fitted to it, or a piece of matting. Theſe mats are made of a piece of cane or reed. The reeds being laid parallel to each other, are faſtened together with ſinews, or catguts, or elſe ſome kind of packthread, ſuch as they have had an opportunity of procuring from Europeans. The order or diſtribution of theſe huts in a craal, or clan, is moſt frequently in the form of a circle, with the doors inwards; by this means a kind of yard or court is formed, where the cattle is kept at night. The milk, as ſoon as taken from the cow, is put to other milk which is curdled, and is kept in a leather ſack; of this the hairy ſide being conſidered as the cleaneſt, is turned inwards; ſo that the milk is never drank while it is ſweet. Many falſhoods have been related of this people, which ſeem to have originated in the prejudices and miſrepreſentations of the planters, to which Kolben, as well as other travellers ſince his time, ſeem to have given too eaſy faith. Vaillant, who certainly had the beſt opportunities of being acquainted with them, from learning their language and living among them, ſpeaks of them with a degree of affection. Some authors have ſaid that the families of the ſavages ſleep all promiſcuouſly together in the ſame hut; and are neither acquainted with difference of age, nor that invincible horror which ſeparates beings connected by blood. The ſavages, indeed, confined to what is ſtrictly neceſſary, have never thought of preſerving, under an apparent decency, all the turpitude of unnatural inclinations; and ſeparate apartments for brother and ſiſter, mother and ſon, are not to be found among them. But to conclude becauſe they have only one habitation, one bed, and one mat to repoſe on, after the labours of the day, that they live like the brutes, would be to calumniate innocence, and offer an inſult to nature. Vaillant ſays, he viſited more than one horde of ſavages, and never found any where but modeſty and reſerve amongſt the women, and among the men alſo. He thinks that the women of ſavage nations, once viſited by corrupted Europeans, and too well acquainted with their perverſe inclinations, proſtitute themſelves to all thoſe who chooſe to enjoy them, and gratify their taſte, from a dread of the barbarous cruelties which the whites are capable of committing. If there be a corner of the earth where a decency of conduct and manners is ſtill honoured, he thinks we muſt ſeek for its temple in the boſoms of the deſerts. There is ſomething peculiar in the features of the Hottentot, which, in a certain degree, ſeparates him from the generality of mankind. His cheek bones are exceedingly prominent, ſo that his face, being very broad in that part, and the jaw-bones, on the contrary, extremely narrow, his viſage continues ſtill decreaſing even to the point of the chin. This configuration gives him an air of lankneſs, which makes his head appear very much diſproportioned, and too ſmall for his full and plump body. His flat noſe riſes ſcarcely half an inch at its higheſt elevation, and his noſtrils, which are exceſſively wide, often exceed in height the ridge of his noſe. His mouth is large, and furniſhed with ſmall teeth, well enamelled, and perfectly white: his eyes, very beautiful and open, incline a little towards the noſe, like thoſe of the Chineſe: and to the ſight and touch his hair has the reſemblance of wool, it is very ſhort, curls naturally, and in colour is as black as ebony. He has very little hair, yet he employs no ſmall care to pull out by the roots part of what he has; but the natural thinneſs of his eye-brows ſaves him from this trouble in that part. Though he has no beard but upon the upper-lip, below the noſe, and at the extremity of the chin, he never fails to pluck it out as ſoon as it appears. This gives him an effeminate look, which, joined to the natural mildneſs of his character, deſtroys that commanding fierceneſs common to all men in a ſtate of nature, and which has acquired them the proud title of kings. With regard to proportion of body, a Hottentot is as perfect as if caſt in a mould. His gait is graceful and agile; and all his motions, which are eaſy, ſeem very different from thoſe of the American ſavages, who appear only to have been ſketched out by the hand of nature. The women, with more delicacy of features, exhibit the ſame characteriſtic marks in their figure: they are equally well made. Their breaſts, admirably placed, have a moſt beautiful form, while in the bloom of youth; and their hands are ſmall, and their feet exceedingly well ſhaped, though they never wear ſandals. The ſound of their voice is ſoft; and their idiom, paſſing through the throat, is not deſtitute of harmony. When they ſpeak, they employ a great many geſtures, which give power and gracefulneſs to their arms. The Hottentots, being naturally timid, are conſequently not at all an enterpriſing people. Their phlegmatic coolneſs, and their ſerious looks, give them an air of reſerve, which they never lay aſide, even at the moſt joyful moments; while, on the contrary, all other black or tawney nations give themſelves up to pleaſure with the livelieſt joy, and without any reſtraint. A profound indifference to the affairs of life, inclines them very much to inactivity and indolence: the keeping of their flocks, and the care of procuring a ſubſiſtence, are the only objects that occupy their thoughts. They never follow hunting as ſportſmen, but like people oppreſſed and tormented by hunger. In ſhort, forgetting the paſt, and being under no uneaſineſs for the future, they are ſtruck only with the preſent; and it is that alone engages their attention.

They are, however, the beſt, the kindeſt, and the moſt hoſpitable of people. Whoever travels among them may be aſſured of finding food and lodging; and though they will receive preſents, yet they never aſk for any thing. If the traveller has a long journey to accompliſh, and if they learn, from the information he requires, that there are no hopes of his ſoon meeting with other hordes, that which he is going to quit ſupply him with proviſions, as far as their circumſtances will allow, and with every thing elſe neceſſary for his continuing his journey, and reaching the place of his deſtination. Before the arrival of the Europeans at the Cape, the Hottentots were not acquainted with commerce, and, perhaps, they had no idea even of barter; but, on the appearance of tobacco and toys, they were ſoon initiated into a part of the mercantile myſteries. Theſe objects, which at firſt were only agreeable novelties, by length of time have become wants. When theſe articles grow ſcarce among them, they are ſupplied by the Hottentots of the colonies; for it is proper to obſerve, that however eager they may be to get ſuch trifles into their poſſeſſion, they do not take the trouble to go one ſtep in ſearch of them themſelves, and they chooſe rather to do without them. The Hottentots are repreſented as a miſerable and poor nation, ſuperſtitious, ferocious, and indolent, and exceſſively dirty; in a word, they are vilified in every poſſible manner. That they beſmear themſelves with greaſe is a fact. But then it muſt be conſidered that all theſe ſavages, without exception, are excellent ſwimmers, and perhaps the beſt divers in the world, and the practice of bathing, which they uſe ſeveral times a day, can leave little power to ointments, or even to duſt, to ſpoil and corrode the ſkin. The continual care and attention beſtowed by the Gonaquas in particular, on their dreſs, ſufficiently prove that they are fond of cleanlineſs: all, therefore, that can be ſaid is, that it is ill underſtood; and even before we proceed ſo far, it might be neceſſary to enquire whether they are not obliged to greaſe themſelves in this manner, either on account of the temperature of the climate, or from a want of thoſe reſources which nature has not pointed out to them. Their clothes, indeed, are only the ſpoils taken from ſavage animals; but they do not neglect, as ſome have pretended, to clean and prepare them before they employ them for making dreſſes. A Hottentot is neither poor nor miſerable. He is not poor, becauſe his deſires never exceeding his knowledge, which is very limited; he never feels the ſpur of neceſſity. The language, notwithſtanding its ſingularity, and the difficulty of pronouncing it, is, however, to be acquired by an European: according to Mr. Vaillant, it is more difficult to a Frenchman than to a Dutchman or German. There is a ſpecies of Hottentots, who have got the name of Boſhies-men, from dwelling in woody or mouutainous places. Theſe, particularly ſuch as live towards the north-eaſt, are ſworn enemies to the paſtoral life. They ſubſiſt by hunting and plunder, and never keep any animal alive for the ſpace of one night. By this means they render themſelves odious to the planters, and are purſued and exterminated like wild beaſts; or taken alive, and made ſlaves of. The animals of this country are nearly ſimilar to thoſe of the other parts of Africa. Among the quadrupeds are the lion, elephant, hippopotamus, buffalo, the double-horned rhinoceros, panther, giraffe, or camelopardalis, elk, antelope, ſpringbok, and gazel. Long. 32. to 48. E. HULL, or Kingſton upon Hull, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of York, ſituated on the north ſide of the river Humber, at the mouth of the river Hull, from which it takes its name, formerly defended by a ſtrong wall, ditches, ramparts, and half moons. It was built in the year 1296, by Edward the Firſt, after his return from Scotland, who made it a free borough and endowed it with many privileges. In the year 1440, and reign of Henry VI. it was erected into a county, including a diſtrict of ſome miles diſtance, and the government inveſted in a mayor, and aldermen. In the year 1463, the town was garriſoned by Edward IV. This was the firſt town that ſhut its gates againſt Charles I. in the beginning of the civil war, and ſtood a ſiege of near ſix weeks, being defended by lord Fairfax. The royal army was commanded by the marquis of Newcaſtle, but compelled to raiſe the ſiege. Hull is ſituated low and was formerly ſubject to great inundations, but by proper drains that complaint is now remedied. The commerce of Hull has for ſome time been conſtantly increaſing, ſo as to render it probably the fourth port for buſineſs in the kingdom. Its ſituation is extremely advantageous; for beſides its communication with the Yorkſhire rivers and canals, it has alſo acceſs, by means of the Humber to the Trent, and all its branches and communications: hence it has the import and export trade of many of the northern and midland counties. The foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic; but it has alſo regular traffic with the ſouthern parts of Europe, and with America. More ſhips are ſent from hence to Greenland than any other port, that of London excepted. The coaſting trade for coals, corn, wool, manufactured goods, &c. is very extenſive. A new dock has lately been conſtructed, in which eighty ſhips may ride ſafely and conveniently. There are two churches, an exchange, infirmary, and a Trinity-houſe, which is a corporation compoſed of a ſociety of merchants, for the relief of aged and diſtreſſed ſeamen, their wives and widows. Hull is defended by three forts, garriſoned by ſoldiers. It is the ſeat of a governor, lieutenant-governor, and other officers. Hull ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and has two markets weekly, on Tueſday and Saturday: 97 miles E. Mancheſter, and 173 N. London. Long. 0. 17. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 43. N.

HULS, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and archbiſhopric of Cologn: 2 miles SE. Kempen, and 35 NW. Cologn.

HULST, a town of Flanders, the capital of four offices, with twelve dependant villages, ſituated on a canal, which communicates with the Scheld: it is ſmall but ancient and very ſtrong, by its ſituation among marſhes, and its fortifications. It was ſeveral times taken and retaken by the Dutch and Spaniards, during their wars in the ſixteenth century; and finally given up by the latter at the peace of Munſter, concluded in 1648. In the year 1702, the marquis of Bedmar, commander-general of the Netherlands, in the abſence of the elector of Bavaria, reſolved to attack it, and gave the command to Mr. de Vauban, lieutenant-general, and afterwards marechal of France: but the ſtates having received advice of the expedition, ſent in a number of troops, and ordered the country to be laid under water; which with the gallant conduct of the governor, major-general Dedem, obliged the marquis to retire with the loſs of a thouſand men. In the year 1747, it was taken by the French under the command of comte Lowendahl, being ſhamefully given up by La Roque, the Dutch governor, though he knew that a reinforcement of nine battalions was coming to his relief: 16 miles W. HUNGARY, a country and kingdom of Europe, bounded on the north by Poland, from which it is ſeparated by the Carpathian mountains, on the eaſt by Tranſilvania and Walachia, on the ſouth by Sclavonia, from which it is ſeparated by the Drave and Servia, and on the weſt by Moravia, Auſtria, and Stiria. In a more extenſive ſenſe, Sclavonia, Dalmatia, Boſnia, Servia, Tranſilvania, Moldavia, and Walachia, are comprehended under the general name of Hungary. It appears that the ancient inhabitants of the weſtern parts of Hungary were Pannonians ; of the northern, Jazygians. The Romans reduced Pannonia, and kept it almoſt 400 years, till, in the 4th century, the Vandals drove them out of it, and held it forty years ; but, in the year 395, when they advanced towards Gaul, the Goths took poſſeſſion of their ſettlements ; but theſe were alſo, in their turn, obliged to reſign their new poſſeſſions to the Huns, who had likewiſe, in their turn, driven them from their ancient habitation. In the beginning of the fifth century, when headed by Attilla, not to mention the more extenſive progreſs of their arms, they ſubdued all Pannonia, the two Thracias, part of Niſia, and the country of the Metanaſtic Jazygians. After the death of Attila, the Gepideri and the Goths, with the aſſiſtance of the Romans, among other advantages, wreſted Dacia and Pannonia out of the hands of the Huns. In the year 888, the Huns, under the name of Hungarians, made another irruption into Pannonia, as auxiliaries to Arnulph, emperor of the Weſt, and Leo, emperor of the Eaſt, againſt the Bulgarians and Sclavonians, whom they reduced. They had ſeven commanders ; and Germany and Italy afterwards felt the terrible effect of their ferocity. By degrees their manners took a more civilized turn, and eſpecially when, in the latter part of the tenth century, their prince Geyſa embraced the Chriſtian religion. His ſon Steven, in 997, became the firſt native king of Hungary, completed the eſtabliſhment of the Chriſtian religion, erected biſhoprics, abbeys, and churches, annexed Tranſilvania as a province to Hungary, and at his death was canonized. After him followed a ſucceſſion of twenty kings, natives of the country, of whom the ſecond, by name Peter, put himſelf and kingdom under the protection of the emperor, Henry III. The eighth, Ladiſlaus the Pious, enlarged his dominions with Sclavonia, Croatia, and Dalmatia, and was greatly eſteemed by his people. The tenth, named Stephen III. by his marriage with a Poliſh princeſs, added the diſtrict of Zip. The twelfth, Geyſa II. in the year 1154, invited the Saxons into Tranſilvania. The ſeventeenth, Andrew II. conferred great privileges on the nobility, and even empowered them to oppoſe the king, if he ſhould attempt any thing againſt the laws of the kingdom. And this was not repealed till the year 1688. The nineteenth, Stephen, compelled the Bulgarians to pay him tribute : and the laſt, Andrew III. died in the year 1301. On this followed a ſucceſſion of twelve foreign kings, of whom Louis I. in the year 1356, reunited to the kingdom the whole province of Dalmatia, which had been often attacked by the Venetians. In 1390, Sigiſmund rendered Walachia and Moldavia, tributary to him. Matthias conquered Sileſia and Moravia from the Bohemians. Under Uladiſlaus II. the jus conſuetudinarium, called tripartitum, took place ; and Louis II. the laſt of theſe kings, in 1526, fell in an unſucceſsful battle againſt the Turks, near Mohats. The kingdom devolved next to the houſe of Auſtria, in which it continues to this day. In 1722, in a diet held at Preſburg, the hereditary ſucceſſion in Hungary was ſecured to the houſe of Auſtria, that in caſe of failure of male heirs, females ſhould be capable of holding the crown. The country, towards the north, is mountainous and barren ; the air is cold, but healthy. Near the Danube the ſoil is level and ſandy, the climate temperate, and the air is moiſt. Farther to the ſouth are extenſive plains, exceedingly fertile ; the climate is hot, and the air from the marſhes rendered moiſt and unwholſome. Hot days, with cold nights and intemperance, occaſion diſeaſes, particularly what is emphatically called the Hungarian fever ; and the plague is frequently brought from Turkey. Nevertheleſs, the country is altogether ſuch as to have given riſe to a proverb, which imports that life can only be enjoyed in Hungary ; this proverb is exaggerated, but not altogether without foundation. The level country produces, abundantly, corn of every kind, excellent fruit, wines celebrated for their ſtrength and goodneſs, legumes, hemp, aſparagus, melons, ſaffron, tobacco, &c. The foreſts are beautiful, and the meadows feed numerous herds of cattle, of which the inhabitants yearly export more than 100,000 head. Horſes, buffaloes, aſſes, mules, ſheep, goats, and ſwine are bred, not only ſufficient to ſupply the wants of the inhabitants, but form objects of commerce ; chamois and deer are found in the foreſts and mountains, and in ſome places bears. The rivers and ponds are well ſupplied with fiſh, and the woods with game. The ſides of the mountains produce excellent wine, and within them are found gold, ſilver, iron, lead, quickſilver, antimony, orpiment, ſulphur, vitriol, marcaſite, ſalt, ſalt-petre, loadſtone, different kinds of marble, alabaſter, precious ſtones, but inferior to thoſe of the Eaſt, a metal hardly known elſewhere, called by the Hungarians, Zinnopel, &c. There are many mineral ſprings both warm and cold. The principal mountains are the Carpathian and Crapack. The chief rivers are the Danube, Waag, Gran, Theiſſe, Temes, Drave, Raab, and Leitha. This kingdom, long waſted by war, is beginning to be populous ; it has few large towns, all are ill built, and filled with ruins. The inhabitants are of various origin, Jazygians, Bohemians, Croats, Raſcians, Ruſſians, Walachians, Vandals, Greeks, Jews, but the number of theſe is diminiſhed, and Turks, which are principally a people wandering about as ſmiths or muſicians. Hungarians and Sclavonians are conſidered as the only native inhabitants. The nobility are numerous, well informed, and warlike. Their lands owe their ſovereign no ſervice. The peaſant poſſeſſes nothing, he can be nothing but a farmer, and the proprietor can diſmiſs him at his pleaſure ; without being a ſlave, as in Poland, he is not better off. Anciently the peaſants might change their maſters ; they cannot do ſo now ; they had at one time particular tribunals, to which they might have recourſe ; but this privilege is no longer allowed. The doctrine of the reformation was at firſt preached with ſucceſs ; but, in 1681 the Proteſtants were interdicted from having more than two churches in a county, ſome of which include a hundred towns, and yet their number is greatly ſuperior to the Roman Catholics. Hungary is governed by the king and ſtates. The ſtates of Hungary are divided into four claſſes, to the firſt belong the prelates, as the archbiſhops, biſhops, abbots, and probſts ; to the ſecond claſs belong the great barons, waywodes, bans, or viceroys ; to the third claſs belong the gentry, and to the fourth, the royal free cities. The public revenues conſiſt of contributions, cuſtoms, mines and minerals, ſalt-works, which belong to the crown, royal demeſnes, and eſcheats. Theſe abundantly anſwer the expences of the court, and defence of the frontiers. The kingdom of Hungary can eaſily raiſe an army of 100,000 men, of which 50,000 are in pay, and a like number is furniſhed by the provinces. The infantry are called heyducks, and the cavalry huſſars. The number of inhabitants, including Tranſilvania, is eſtimated at eight millions. Preſburg is the capital.

Charles de Heraugieres, governor of Breda, ſeized the city and caſtle by ſurprize, in the month of February, 1595. The ſtates being deaf to all remonſtrances, the biſhop of Liege applied to the Spaniards for aſſiſtance, who compelled the governor to reſtore it. Louis XIV. king of France, inveſted it, the firſt of March, 1675, and compelled it to ſurrender, after a ſhort ſiege of ſix days, but it was given back to the biſhop by the treaty of Nimmegen, in 1678. It ſuffered more in 1673, when the French took and burned the whole town, becauſe the citizens had taken up arms to aſſiſt the garriſon, which was very weak; they alſo broke down a bridge of freeſtone, which had been built over the Meuſe in the year 1294. The Spaniards retook it in the year 1694, and reſtored it to the biſhop at the peace of Ryſwick. In the year 1701, Huy was ſeized by the French; the allies, under the command of baron de Troignée, beſieged it the 15th of Auguſt, in 1703, and on the 25th it ſurrendered, with all its forts, and the garriſon became priſoners of war. The 28th of May, 1705, the comte de Gaſſé, with a detachment of the French army, attacked it, and on the 10th of June the garriſon ſurrendered priſoners of war. Again, at a little time after that, the allies, being reinforced by the army of the duke of Marlborough, from the Moſelle, became maſters of it, the garriſon in like manner being made priſoners of war. The Dutch kept poſſeſſion of it till the year 1718, when they deſtroyed the fortifications, and ſurrendered it to the biſhop. JAFFA, a town of Aſia, in Paleſtine, ſituated near the coaſt of the Mediterranean, formerly a celebrated city, and called Joppa, frequently mentioned in the ſcriptures, being the port where Jonah embarked on his miſſion to Nineveh, and the place where Peter raiſed Tabitha from the dead. It is now inhabited by Turks or Arabs, with a mixture of Greeks, Maronites, and Armenians. The houſes are ſmall, and ſurrounded with the ruins of the ancient walls and towers; upon the coaſt are ſome houſes of ſtone and magazines. The road is protected by a caſtle built on a rock; the harbour is deſtroyed, and the water is ſo ſhallow that large veſſels cannot come cloſe enough to the land to unload. The Franks, Greeks, and Armenians have each of them ſmall houſes for the reception of pilgrims of different nations. The principal commerce is in grain; particularly rice from Egypt. The money paid by the pilgrims, for permiſſion to viſit the Holy Land is part of it ſent to Mecca, and part to the kiſlar-aga of Conſtantinople, but the cuſtoms belong to the pacha of Gaza, in whoſe juriſdiction it is ſituated. JAFFNAPATAM, a town of the iſland of Ceylon, ſituated on a peninſula, and ſurrounded with high walls, flanked with four baſtions, a fort, and other outworks. It was anciently the capital of an independent kingdom, which was divided into four provinces: the ſoil is low, fertile, and planted with beautiful trees; and the country is ſo populous that they reckon 160 towns in a diſtrict of 12 leagues in length, and 8 in breadth. The firſt European ſettlement was made by the Portugueſe, who were driven out by the Dutch. Long. 80. 12. E. Greenwich. Lat. 9. 45. N.—This town and ſettlement were taken by the Britiſh, in the latter end of October, 1795, under the command of admiral Rainier and colonel Stuart.

JAGARNAUTPORUM, or Cuckanara, a town of Hindooſtan, in the circar of Rajamundry, celebrated for a grand Pagoda, one of the principal objects of Hindoo veneration, and forming an excellent ſea mark for veſſels ſailing in the Bay of Bengal: it is ſituated a few miles to the eaſt of Chilka lake: 27 miles E. Rajamundry.

JAGELITZ, a river of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, which runs into the Doſſe: 6 miles S. Kyritz.

JAGERNDORF, a principality of Sileſia: it was originally a part of the country of Troppau, and was firſt erected into a diſtinct principality, in favour of duke Nicolas V. grandſon to John I. duke of Troppau and Ratibor, who took up his reſidence at Jagerndorf. Frederic William, elector of Brandenburg, in 1686, received ſome equivalent or ſatisfaction for his pretenſions to Jagerndorf, but notwithſtanding this, in 1740, Frederic II. king of Pruſſia, thought proper to revive his claim, and at the peace of Berlin, in 1742, Maria Thereſa, queen of Hungary and Bohemia, made a perpetual ceſſion to king Frederic II. of the part of the principalities of Troppau and Jagerndorf, lying on this ſide of the Oppa, together with the diſtrict of Kotſcher, formerly belonging to Moravia.

JAGERNDORF, or Karnowitz, a town of Sileſia, and capital of a principality of the ſame name, ſituated on the Oppa, containing two churches and a convent: 12 miles NW. Troppau, and 20 W. Ratibor.

JALOWKA, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Troki: 24 miles S. Grodno.

JAMAICA, an iſland of the Weſt Indies, diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus, in his ſecond voyage, in the year 1494, who after a ſlight diſpute with the natives, took poſſeſſion of it for the king of Spain, preſerving the word Jamaica, by which it was called by the Indians. In the year 1503, Columbus was ſhipwrecked on this iſland, and remained here in a wretched ſituation, rather more than twelve months. Diego, the ſon of Columbus, according to the powers granted to his father by the king of Spain, appointed Eſquivel, a noble Caſtilian, as governor of the new diſcovered iſland, in the year 1509, who built a town called Sevilla Nueva, near the ſpot where Columbus was ſhipwrecked. In the year 1596, ſir Anthony Shirley, invaded and plundered the iſland, and about forty years afterwards it was again plundered, by a party of Engliſh, under colonel Jackſon. In the year 1655, Jamaica was taken by the Engliſh, under the command of Penn and Venables, who had been ſent by Cromwell, to ſeize on Hiſpaniola, but this attempt not proving ſucceſsful, they found but little difficulty in taking Jamaica. Jamaica is about a hundred and twenty miles from eaſt to weſt, and forty two where broadeſt, from north to ſouth, and is ſuppoſed to contain between four and five millions of acres. It is divided by a ridge of mountains which runs through the whole iſland from eaſt to weſt, from which riſe innumerable rivers well ſtored with fiſh of various kinds, many of which are navigable for canoes; on theſe mountains grow great varieties of trees, ſuch as cedars, lignumvitæ, mahogany, &c, always green. The climate of Jamaica is more temperate, and the weather more various, than in the Caribbee iſlands, and there is no country between the tropics where the heat is leſs troubleſome. All the year round, the mornings are exceſſively hot, till about eight o'clock, when the eaſterly breeze begins to blow, and gradually increaſes till about twelve, when it is generally the ſtrongeſt, and laſts till two or three, when it begins to die away till about five, when it is quite ſpent, and returns no more till the next morning. About eight in the evening, begins a land-breeze, which blows four leagues into the ſea, and continues increaſing till twelve at night; after which it decreaſes till four in the morning, when no more of it is to be felt till next night. Storms uſed to be very rare here, till within this century. Every night here are piercing dews, which are reckoned very unwholſome, eſpecially to new-comers, but in the plains, or ſandy places near the ſea there are few if any fogs. The rains are violent, and the drops very large. The tides are ſcarce diſcernible, their increaſe or decreaſe depending moſtly on the winds, and not according to the age of the moon. The days and nights here are almoſt of an equal length all the year round. Not half the iſland is cultivated; natural productions are ſugar, ginger, cotton, coffee, indigo, pimento, cocoa, ſeveral kinds of wood, ſome medicinal drugs, and tobacco; maize, or Indian corn, Guinea-corn, peas of various ſorts, fruits in abundance, as oranges, lemons, limes, ſhaddocks, citrons, pomegranates, pine-apples, melons, &c. Jamaica is divided into three counties, Middleſex, Surry, and Cornwall, in which are ſix towns, and twenty-ſeven villages; St. Jago de la Vega, or Spaniſh Town, is the capital of the iſland, where the chief juſtice reſides. The legiſlature of Jamaica is compoſed of the captain general or commander, a council, and houſe of aſſembly. The number of negroes in the year 1787, amounted to 250,000, the number of whites 30,000, freed negroes and people of colour 10,000, and Maroons 1400, in all 291,400. In the year 1787, the exports from Jamaica were 840,548 cwt. of ſugar, 2,543,025 gallons of rum, 6416 gallons of molaſſes, 616,444 lbs. of pimento, 6395 cwt. of coffee, 1,906,467 lbs. of cotton wool, 27,623 lbs. of indigo, 4816 of ginger, 82 cwt. of cocoa, 18,140 lbs. of tobacco, 5878 tons of mahogany, and 6701 tons of logwood, with ſundry other articles, to the value of 147,286l. ſterling, amounting in the whole to the ſum of 2,136,442l. 17s. 3d. ſterling, at the current London prices. The imports of the ſame year, amounted to the ſum of 1,496,232l. 5s. 4d. The centre of the iſland is ſituated Long. 76. 45. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 12. N.

JAMAICA, a town of Africa, in the iſland of York, built by a Mulatto, the ſon of an Engliſhman, where the Engiſh have a factory.

JAMAMA, or Imam, a town of Arabia, in the province of Nedsjed, famous, before the days of Mahomet, for being the native place of a prophet of the name of Moſeilama; ſituated on a river which runs into the Perſian Gulf: 330 miles SSW. Baſſora, and 420. ENE. Mecca. Long. 63. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 25. 5. N.

JAMASIJRO, or Sansju, a province of Japan.

JAMATTO, or Wosju, a province of Japan.

JAMBI, the capital of a kingdom, of the ſame name, in the iſland of Sumatra, much frequented by the Engliſh and Dutch, on account of its excellent pepper. It is ſituated on a large river navigable for boats: the town is large, but the air unwholſome. Long. 102. 45. E. Greenwich. Lat. 1. 14. S.

JAMBO, or Janbo, a ſea-port town of Arabia Felix, in the province of Hedjas, on the coaſt of the Red Sea, with a good harbour: 72 miles SW. Medina. Lat. 24. 5. N.

JAMBON, a river of the iſland of St. Vincent, which runs into the ſea: 5½ miles S. Young Point.

JAMDRO, or Palta, a lake of Aſia, in Thibet. It is of ſo great extent that, according to the report of the natives, it requires eighteen days to walk round it. In the Lama's map, however the circumference is only 150 Britiſh miles. In the middle of it, there is, according to Giorgi, a continued range of hillocks and iſlands; or according to the Lama's map, one large iſland, encircled by a lake from three to eight miles wide. On the weſtern ſhore of this iſland, or congeries of iſlands, is a monaſtery, and the ſeat of the Lamiſſa Tarcepamo, or The Great Regenerate; in whom the Thibetians think that a divine ſpirit is regenerated, as in the Great Lama: 150 miles NNE. Taſſaſudon, and 24 S. Laſſa.

JAMENGIAN, a town of Perſia, in the province of Farſiſtan: 14 leagues SSW. Schiras.

JAMES'S BAY, the eaſtern part of the South diviſion of that great body of water called Hudſon's Bay: about 150 miles acroſs. Long. 58. 30. to 82. 45. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 10. to 55. 10. N.

JAMJA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Blekingen : 9 miles E. Carlſcrona.

JAMNEY, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Chrudim : 17 miles NE. Leutmiſchl.

JAMNING, a mountain of Germany, in Upper Carniola : 3 miles S. Remanſdorf.

JAMNITZ, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Znaym : 9 miles W. Budwiz.

JAMOUR, a river of Africa, in the country of Benin, otherwiſe called Camarones. See Camarones.

JAMSIO, a town of Sweden, in the province of Blekingen : 32 miles W. Carlſcrona.

JAMTLAND, a province of Sweden, bordering on Norway, nearly of a circular form, about 70 miles in length, and 60 in breadth, annexed to the crown of Sweden by the treaty of Roſchild, in the year 1658. It is in general a mountainous country, but the hills differ extremely from each other in appearance. The weſtern part of this province is over-run with vaſt craggy rocks and high mountains, which lie on the frontiers of Norway ; and between theſe are deep vallies and rapid torrents. However, in ſome ſpots among the mountains, which are frequently covered with ſnow, one meets with fine verdure, and plenty of nutritive paſtures. In theſe parts the inhabitants houſe their cattle, even in ſummer time : and thus never fail of breeding fine cows, whoſe milk yields excellent butter, and yet they purchaſe beef and tallow from Norway. The eaſtern part of Jamtland is a champaign country, watered with ſeveral lakes and rivers, which abound with fiſh. And ſuch is the fertility of ſome ſpots of land in theſe parts, that in a good year, when the corn has not been nipt by the froſt, the neighbouring provinces are ſupplied with grain from hence. Barley is the grain that is moſtly ſown here : they alſo ſow a conſiderable quantity of rye, and ſome wheat. This country produces oats of an extraordinary goodneſs, and abounds in excellent turnips. Sometimes, indeed, the ſeverity of the froſt cauſes a ſcarcity of corn, and then the Jamtlanders are obliged to make bread of the pounded bark of trees ; the rye bread being reſerved for feſtivals. In this province many hands are employed in extracting iron from a kind of iron-ore, reſembling ſmall ſtones, which are collected in fenny places. Here are alſo alum-quarries, a white and porous calx, or chalky earth, ſand-ſtone, ſlate, the lapis ollarius, fine rock cryſtals, lead-ore, two new-built copper-works, and a place where ſalt-petre is refined. That this country is very thinly inhabited, is evident from hence : that there are only ſix places where divine ſervice is performed every Sunday ; that in ſome churches it is celebrated every other Sunday, and in others only every third Sunday ; and that in all the reſt the congregations aſſemble but three or four times in a year. There is not ſo much as one town in Jamtland, and only eleven pariſhes, in which forty-ſix churches are erected. In all theſe pariſhes there are but 717 chimneys. The inhabitants, for the moſt part, ſubſiſt by agriculture, grazing, hunting, and fiſhing. They alſo carry on a conſiderable trade with the Norwegians, whom they ſupply with ſalt-pans, ſteel, and iron-ware, and a kind of leather, dreſſed in a particular manner, ſo as entirely to keep out the water ; of which they make ſhoes, boots, and even jackets, that are proof againſt wet. Every peaſant is obliged to contribute towards the ſubſiſtence of the ſoldiery ; ſo that this country maintains a regiment of foot, or, according to others, of dragoons, at the expence of 31,609 dollars, and a troop of horſe, the charge of which is 6210 dollars.

JAMULMURAG, a town of Hindooſtan, in the circar of Cuddapa : 5 miles NE. Gandicotta.

JANAGUR, a town of Hindooſtan, in the country of Guzerat : 100 miles W. Amedabad. Long. 70. 56. E. Greenwich. Lat. 23. 30. N.

JANDLSPRUNN, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria : 8 miles NW. Aigen.

JANDUN, a town of France, in the department of the Ardennes, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Charleville : 3 leagues S. Mezieres.

JANIDUNI, a town of European Turkey, in Beſſarabia, ſituated on the Black Sea : 40 miles WSW. Otchakov.

JANISZKI, a town of Samogitia : 36 miles NNE. Medniki.

JANNA, or Jannina, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Theſſaly. It is a conſiderable town, and the ſee of a Greek biſhop ; ſituated on a lake, which communicates with the river Peneus. The province, by the Turks, is called Janna, from this town : 40 miles W. Lariſſa, and 340 E. Conſtantinople.

JANNA, ſee Theſſaly.

JANOVITZA, a town of Croatia : 5 miles E. Ivanitz.

JANOW, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Kaminiec : 44 miles NNW. Kaminiec.

JANUSPOL, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Volhynia : 24 miles W. Berdiczow.

Janzé, a town of France, in the department of the Ille and Villaine, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of La Guerche : 3½ leagues W. La Guerche, and 1¼ S. Chateau Giron.

JAO-PIN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Quang-tong : 22 miles NE. Tchao.

JAPAN, a large and powerful empire of Aſia, called indifferently by the Europeans Japan, or Japon, by the natives Niphon, and Hiphon, or Nippon, and Hippon, from the largeſt iſland of which it is compoſed. The maritime Chineſe pronounce it Zippon, or Sippon, but the reſt call it Je-pwen, or Ge-puen, all which have the ſame ſignification, and were probably given to it on account of its eaſtern ſituation, the word ni, or hi, ſignifying fire, and, in a more emphatical ſenſe, the ſun ; and pon, or phon, a baſis, or foundation. Japan is ſituated on the eaſtern verge of Aſia, conſiſting of three large, and a number of ſmaller iſlands. It lies about 160 leagues eaſtward of the coaſt of China and Corea. The author of the Church Hiſtory of Japan, publiſhed in Engliſh, in the year 1700, computes all thoſe iſlands together to contain about 600 leagues in compaſs, or 200 leagues in length, and ſo proportionable in breadth, excluſive of their various windings, and of ſundry remote iſlands which are ſubject to that empire. About the year 1542, whilſt Alphonſo de Souſa was viceroy of the Eaſt Indies, three Portugueſe, called Antonio da Motta, Franciſco Zeimoto, and Antonio Peixola, in their paſſage from Siam to China, were by ſtreſs of weather driven upon the Japaneſe coaſt. Upon the report they gave of this country, others of their nation, particularly ſome of the miſſionaries, were ſent thither. Theſe, by their ſkill in the liberal ſciences, ſo ſoon recommended themſelves to the Japaneſe, that they eaſily obtained liberty of commerce, together with the free exerciſe of their religion, and, in proceſs of time, permiſſion from the emperor to propagate the Chriſtian faith throughout his dominions. All the coaſts of this empire are ſurrounded with craggy, high, and inacceſſible mountains, and ſhallow boiſterous ſeas, and their creeks and bays are for the moſt part choaked up with rocks, ſhelves, ſands, and whirlpools ; ſo that Providence ſeems to have excluded it from all communication with the reſt of the world. The country is no leſs pleaſant and inviting within than its avenues are diſcouraging and frightful. Its ſituation is ſuch, that it would be many degrees hotter than England, were not the air refreſhed by the winds which continually blow from the ſea, and to which thoſe iſlanders are much expoſed by the height of their ſituation. However, it muſt be owned that this ſituation makes their winters exceſſively cold. The ſnow falls in great quantities, and is generally followed by a hard froſt. It renders their ſeaſons likewiſe more inconſtant, and liable to various changes which are ſeldom felt in other parts of the Indies, particularly to violent and laſting rains. The months of June and July, eſpecially, are called Sat-ſuki, or water-months, becauſe moſt ſubject to them ; and indeed if the air was not thus cooled, the heat would be almoſt intolerable. The country is likewiſe expoſed to dreadful thunder, lightnings, ſtorms, and hurricanes. The ſoil is naturally mountainous, and the ancient relations deſcribe it as very barren ; nevertheleſs the induſtry of the inhabitants have made it ſufficiently fertile to ſupply their own wants, and even to furniſh other countries with the fineſt and whiteſt of rice and corn, which are exported by the natives and Dutch in vaſt quantities. They have five different grains, which they comprehend under the name of gokokf; the komi, or rice, of the fineſt of which they make bread; omuggi, which is their barley; the third is called koomuggi, or ſmall grain, and is their wheat, of which they chiefly make cakes for their table; fourthly, their daid-ſu, or daid beans, which they grind into meal, and boil for eating: the laſt is their adſuki, or ſocſu, another ſort of bean, which they boil in the ſame manner as the daid ſu, or make into ſweet cakes, by mixing ſome ſugar with them. Beſides the five ſorts of grain above mentioned, they have the Indian wheat, the millet, and ſeveral others in great abundance. The rocks and moſt barren places produce a variety of fruits, plants, and roots, which the indigence of their forefathers obliged them to uſe for food. Even their large woods and foreſts, and the long ridges of mountains with which the country is interſected, produce good paſturage, and are ſtocked with deer, oxen, buffaloes, ſheep, hogs, and other uſeful animals. Their ſeas, as well as lakes and rivers, furniſh them with plenty and variety of fiſh. The country abounds with rivers, lakes, and ſprings of various kinds, ſo that they have plenty of ſweet as well as medicinal waters. Japan breeds a great number of horſes: though not near ſo large as thoſe of Europe, they are yet very beautiful, and highly valued. The foreſts abound with all ſorts of wild beaſts, of the furs of which they make conſiderable traffic, as well as of elephants' teeth. This noble animal is not only found in great plenty in their woods, but is likewiſe bred up tame in their towns and cities. Their ſeas, beſides fiſh, furniſh them with great quantities of ambergriſe and white coral, and ſome pearls of great price, beſides variety of ſea-plants and ſhells. But the great riches of this empire conſiſts in the variety and fineneſs of their metals and minerals. Their volcanoes, and numberleſs hot ſprings, ſufficiently ſhow what prodigious quantities of ſulphur lie concealed in the bowels of the earth; to ſay nothing of the immenſe loads of it which are almoſt every where dug up for uſe and exportation. Mines of gold as well as golden ſand, are to be found in many of their provinces, particularly in the great iſland of Niphon; but the emperor lays an abſolute claim to theſe, as well as other metals, none of which can be opened without his permiſſion. Of gold and ſilver extracted from mines, he reſerves two-thirds for himſelf, and the reſt he allows to the lord or prince in whoſe territory they are found. Silver mines are not ſo numerous; but ſome of them are very rich; but the moſt plentiful of all metals is their copper, of which they have great variety; ſome kinds exquiſitely fine, and others very coarſe and cheap. From ſome of it the refiners extract a conſiderable quantity of gold. All that is deſigned for exportation is caſt into cylinders, about 11 or 12 inches long, and one inch thick: theſe they put into boxes, which hold 125 pounds weight, and are ſold to the Dutch, who make a conſiderable traffic of it. Some tin they have, ſo very fine and white that it looks almoſt like ſilver, and ſells at a high price. The iron mines are not numerous, but rich, and yield great quantities of metals, which is refined and caſt into bars; but their greateſt art is in tempering their ſteel, of which they make the fineſt and keeneſt ſcymeters, cutlaſſes, and other weapons, which carry an edge beyond thoſe of any other nation in the world; but moſt of thoſe are forbidden to be exported, under the ſevereſt penalties. The Japaneſe are ſo uſed to earthquakes, that they are ſcarcely alarmed at any, unleſs they chance to be very terrible indeed, and bury whole towns under their ruins. The religion of the Japaneſe is allowed by all writers to have been groſs heatheniſm and idolatry from time immemorial. They do not ſeem to have even a tolerable notion of a Supreme Being; but believe the world to have exiſted from eternity, and that the gods they worſhip were men, or beings that lived on earth ſeveral thouſand years, and were afterwards, for their virtue, raiſed to that height of power and dignity they have ever ſince enjoyed. All agree in obſerving the five following maxims, or precepts: not to kill, or to eat any thing that is killed; not to ſteal; not to defile another man's bed; not to lye; nor to drink wine. It was not after the firſt diſcovery of this country by the Portugueſe, that is, about the year 1552, that ſome Jeſuits, ſent thither from Ma-cao, by Francis Xavier, found means to be introduced into that empire, and to recommend themſelves to the quality and learned men, by their ſkill in the mathematics and other ſciences, as well as by the many curious inſtruments of aſtronomy, navigation, and other European rarities which they produced. Their ſucceſs was ſo great, that in a little time not only vaſt multitudes of people of all ranks were converted, that ſeveral of their petty kings, or maritime princes, not only encouraged the propagation of it, but ſome of them made open profeſſion of Chriſtianity. They went on with this wonderful ſucceſs above ſixty years, that is, till about the year 1616, during which time all their letters from thence were fraught with accounts of the converſions they made, and the great confidence they had of ſeeing idolatry quickly baniſhed out of the whole empire; when all this promiſing ſunſhine was at once turned into a diſmal gloom; the miſſionaries were ſuſpected and accuſed of the moſt treaſonable deſigns, and under pretence of converting the empire, of plotting to dethrone the emperor, and bringing his dominions under the government of the Spaniſh monarchs. This charge was believed by the jealous emperor, and all the grandees of Japan; and turned their kindneſs into ſuch a deteſtation againſt thoſe miſſionaries and their religion, as produced a moſt dreadful perſecution, in tho year 1622, not only againſt them, but againſt as many of their proſelytes as refuſed to renounce it, who were all put to the moſt excruciating deaths. Ever ſince that epoch, Chriſtianity hath been entirely extirpated out of the whole empire, and held in the greateſt abhorrence; nor is any perſon or people ſuffered to live there, who is ſuſpected to profeſs it; nor any ſtranger to come amongſt them that doth not publicly renounce it, under the ſevereſt penalties. The government of Japan is, and hath been for many centuries, altogether monarchical and deſpotic. It was anciently divided into a great many ſmall kingdoms, which ſtill retain their ancient names, but they were at length ſwallowed up in one, to which all the reſt are become either ſubject or tributary, and the number of the former hath ſtill gradually encreaſed above that of the latter. Of theſe laſt they reckon between 50 and 60, who are veſted with the regal title and dignity, and are in ſome meaſure abſolute in their reſpective territories, but ſo entirely ſubject to the emperor that he can diſpoſe, or even condemn them to death, if he thinks proper. It hath likewiſe been a conſtant policy in theſe monarchs to ſplit theſe petty kingdoms into ſtill ſmaller diviſions, and to give thoſe princes leave to make war againſt, and encroach upon each other's dominions, as the moſt effectual means to weaken their power, and ſecure their obedience. They likewiſe frequently dethroned and impriſoned them, and gave their territories to others, and either curtail or enlarge them according to their intereſt or pleaſure; ſo that thoſe little ſtates are deſignedly kept in a conſtant fluctuation, to prevent their revolting, and making themſelves independent. As to the people they are doubly ſlaves, firſt to their own princes, and next to their emperors, who have power of life and death over them all. Anciently, the emperors were likewiſe ſovereign pontiffs, under the title of dairos; at which time their perſons and dignity were held ſo ſacred, that not only every rebellion againſt them, but even every contravention to their decrees, whether in civil or religious matters, was deteſted as a crime againſt heaven itſelf. They were, in ſome meaſure, worſhipped by all their ſubjects, and aſſumed ſuch ſtate as if they had been partakers of a divine nature. They never ſet their feet upon the ground, nor ſuffered the ſun to ſhine or wind to blow upon them. They never wore their clothes above one day, and never ate twice out of the ſame diſhes. In a word, all their furniture, veſſels, and utenſils belonging to bed or board, were renewed every day. They never cut their hair or beard, nor pared their nails. They kept themſelves as much as poſſible from being publicly ſeen, and were chiefly waited on by twelve wives, whom they married with great ſolemnity. The titles they aſſumed, and by which they were addreſſed, came little ſhort of blaſphemy, and the manner of approaching them favoured ſtrong of idolatry. Whoſoever appeared in their preſence, were obliged to proſtrate themſelves flat upon the ground, and in that humble ſituation preſent their petition, anſwer their queſtions, and receive their commands. And as the emperor lived thus in ſplendour, luxury, and effeminacy, he committed the chief care of the civil, and all the military affairs, to his prime miniſter, who was ſtyled cubo, or generaliſſimo of all the forces; which dignity was commonly beſtowed on one of his youngeſt ſons, for the eldeſt always inherited his father's throne; and it was by one of theſe cubos that the dairos were ſtripped of their whole civil authority: from that time the dairo has only been at the head of religious matters, whilſt the cubo, or emperor, bears an abſolute dominion over all civil or military affairs throughout the empire. The former is ſtill permitted to live in the ſame ſtate and grandeur as his anceſtors did, and the latter is obliged to pay him a kind of homage, as if he acted only as his deputy or viceroy; ſo that, in reality, the cubo is now the real monarch of Japan, and the dairo only the high prieſt. His army conſiſts of 100,000 foot, and 20,000 horſe, including his garriſons, all well diſciplined, and, in general, ſtout men. Their arms are muſkets, bows and arrows, the ſcymitar, and dagger, and all of the beſt metal. The Japaneſe are generally very acute, and of a quick apprehenſion, good underſtanding, modeſt, patient, and courteous, and excelling all the Orientals in docility. They are ſo juſt in their dealings, that one may abſolutely depend on their word: and, contrary to the Chineſe, diſdain to take advantage of thoſe they deal with. They are commonly very ingenious at handicraft trades, and excel even the Chineſe in ſeveral of their manufactures, particularly in the beauty, goodneſs, and variety of ſilks, cotton, and other ſtuffs, and in their japan and porcelaine works; on which account they are eſteemed all over the Eaſt, as well as in Europe. Their japan bears a much finer gloſs, is much harder and more laſting, and more beautiful than that of China; and their porcelaine is better burnt, and more finely wrought and painted: ſo that both articles bear a much higher price, and they would have a much greater demand for all their merchandiſe, notwithſtanding their high price, if the emperors did not reſtrain their ſubjects ſo much from trading into foreign countries, or would give greater encouragement to ſtrangers to trade amongſt them; but their natural jealouſy of all foreigners, and eſpecially of Europeans, ſince the ſad cataſtrophe of the Chriſtians, hath occaſioned ſevere laws and penalties to be enacted againſt many branches of their ancient commerce. They are allowed to trade with none but the Chineſe, Coreans, the country of Jedſo, and with the Dutch. The commodities exported from thence are rice, ſilk and cotton wrought, fine porcelaine and japan-work; gold and ſilver, though not in ſuch quantities as formerly; copper wrought and in bars; iron, ſteel, and other baſe and artificial metals; variety of rich furs, moſtly brought from the land of Jedſo; tea of all ſorts, and much finer and better cured than that of China; a great variety likewiſe of medicinal herbs, roots, woods, and gums, well preſerved; to theſe we may add diamonds and other precious ſtones, pearls of exquiſite beauty, coral, great quantities and variety of fine ſea-ſhells, and ambergriſe, which they had ſo little eſteem for, that they called it by no better name than cuſuranoſu, or excrements of the whale. In exchange for theſe commodities, the Hollanders bring them glaſſes of all ſorts; raw and wrought ſilks, raw hides, hempen and woollen cloths, quickſilver, borax, antimony, ſpices of all kinds, of which they make an immenſe gain, not only in Japan, but in all other parts of India. They likewiſe import thither ſome ſorts of ſugar, muſk, camphor, ſiampan, braſil and other woods, calambac, elephants' teeth, and a great number of ſmall wares, which come from China, Thibet, and Siam; china, gin-ſeng, and other medicinal roots, from Tartary. All theſe commodities are imported or exported cuſtom free. The Dutch are ſtrictly watched, and kept under ſevere reſtraint, from the time of their arrival to that of their ſailing away. The names of the three principal iſlands are Niphon, or Hiphon, ſituated in Long. 132. 30. to 147. 30. E. Greenwich; Lat. 32. 10. to 41. N.; Ximo, the ſecond in dignity and extent, Long. 131. to 135. 20. E. Greenwich; Lat. 31. 45. to 34. 55. N. The third is Xikoko, ſituated in Long. 134. 24. to 136. 40. E. Lat. 33. 20. to 35. 6. N.

JAPARA, a ſea-port town of the iſland of Java, ſituated on a peninſula on the north coaſt: the harbour is formed by a river of the ſame name, and is capable of receiving a great number of ſhips. The inhabitants are Mahometans, and deteſt the Dutch: 200 miles E. Batavia.

JATOE, a town of the iſland of Borneo: 120 miles N. Negara.

JAVA, a large iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, ſeparated from Sumatra by a narrow ſea called the Straits of Sunda, 680 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and from 60 to 80 in breadth from north to ſouth. The centre of the iſland is mountainous, but on the coaſts low and marſhy, which renders the air exceedingly unhealthy, eſpecially to new comers. No Europeans have formed any eſtabliſhments here except the Dutch, who have ſeveral on the coaſts, the principal of which are Batavia and Bantam. The reſt of the iſland is divided into ſeveral kingdoms, or ſtates, which are greatly influenced by the European ſettlements. Little of the internal country is known. The productions are various, and valuable for commerce. Pepper grows in ſuch quantities, that it is ſaid the kingdom of Bantam alone can annually furniſh 10,000 tons. Here are mines of gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones. Among quadrupeds may be reckoned the rhinoceros, elephants, tigers, wild boars, horſes, cows, deer, apes, buffaloes, ſheep, civet cats, &c. with ſeveral animals unknown in Europe; among the birds are pigeons, beautifully parroquets, peafowls of an extraordinary ſize, Bantam fowls, &c. In the vegetable world are a great number of flowering trees and ſhrubs, remarkable for the elegance and perfumery of their flowers, fruit-trees, and timber-trees, whoſe wood is uſeful for building and cabinet work: caſſia, or wild cinnamon, myrobolans, galangal, red ſaunders wood, gum benzoin, tamarinds, cocoa-nuts, coffee and rice are among the productions of Java. The natives are by themſelves ſaid to be deſcended from the Chineſe; but of this there can be no certainty. They are of a dark complexion, with flat faces, thin ſhort black hair, large eye-brows and cheeks. The men are ſtout made, and are cloathed with calico, wrapped round them two or three times, as likewiſe are the women from the knees to the arm-pits. Thoſe who are rich, have ornaments of gold, &c. Near the coaſt they are Mahometans, in the interior parts they are pagans. Long. 104. to 114. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 5. 45. to 7. 50. S.

JAUER, a principality of Sileſia, bounded on the north by the principalities of Glogau and Sagan, on the eaſt by Lignitz and Schweidnitz, on the ſouth by Bohemia, and on the weſt by Bohemia, and Luſatia. The whole principality is mountainous. Its mountains are covered with wood. It yields likewiſe pit-coal and mill-ſtones. The mountains contain various ores, with numerous mines of iron and copper, which are actually worked. In this principality too is a mineral ſpring, with ſome warm baths, which are much frequented. Excluſive of twelve towns, in this principality are ſome villages four miles in length. Some of theſe villages contain two hundred families and upwards, and among their inhabitants are artificers particularly weavers, whoſe goods are bought up for exportation. The earthen ware is much eſteemed. The principal towns are Jauer, Hirſchberg, Lowenberg, and Bunzlau, all of which give name to circles, or diſtricts, and are their reſpective capitals.

JAUER, a town of Sileſia, and capital of the principality of the ſame name. In the year 1640, this town was taken and plundered by the Imperialiſts: 16 miles NW. Schweidnitz, and 12 N. Freyburg. Long. 24. 4. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 66. N.

IBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Oſnabruck: 10 miles S. Oſnabruck.

Iça, or Yça, a town of South America, in the audience of Lima, and one of three towns which give name to a province called Iça Piſco and Naſca. It is ſituated in a valley, and watered by a river which in the ſummer would be dry but from the induſtry of the inhabitants, who have turned ſeveral ſtreams into its bed. The principal commerce of the place conſiſts in glaſs, wine, brandy, &c.

Iça Piſco and Naſca (Juriſdiction of), a province of Peru, in the audience of Lima, ſo called from the three principal towns: it comprehends about 140 miles along the coaſt of the Pacific Ocean, interſected with ſandy deſerts: olives and vines are cultivated; and both the oil and the wine are eſteemed excellent and ſent into the other provinces: where the land can be watered, it produces corn, maize, and variety of excellent fruit. The inhabitants near the coaſt are chiefly employed in catching fiſh, of which they cure a great quantity, and ſend into the inland country, where they find a ready ſale.

ICELAND, an iſland in the North Sea, about 625 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 310 from north to ſouth. Iceland properly conſiſts of a prodigious range of mountains running from eaſt to weſt; on the declivities of which, and in the vallies lying betwen them, the inhabitants live. Several of theſe high mountains, which are always covered with ice and ſnow, are called Jocheler. Here are alſo ſome mountains that conſiſt only of rocks and ſand, which are conſequently barren. But on other mountains, ſituated near the coaſt, there are levels, or plains, covered with verdure, of ſeveral miles in extent, which produce fine graſs. Though Iceland is, for the moſt part, a mountainous country, yet there are roads practicable for a horſe in every part of the iſland. Carriages were formerly uſed here, but are now laid aſide, as the trouble attending them was greater than the conveniency that could ariſe from them. Every year ſome hundreds of pack horſes come over the mountains from the north, to the trading places in the ſouth parts of the iſland: theſe are loaded with butter, woollen manufactures, &c. which they barter for other commodities. Earthquakes are not unfrequent in Iceland, eſpecially in the ſouth parts. Springs which are naturally warm, and even hot ſprings, are frequently to be met with in Iceland, and likewiſe waters that have a mineral taſte. About Mount Hecla are ſeveral ſmall baſons of warm water, which ſometimes emit a copious ſteam, but at other times this vapour is not ſo viſible. There are alſo evident ſigns that the mountains of Iceland contain iron, copper, and even ſilver ore. Near theſe are found two kinds of agate, which when lighted burns like a candle; a ſpecies of bitumen, which is black, ſhining, and pretty hard; and another ſort of black earth, which is harder and breaks into thin diaphanous laminæ; this is not inflammable, but vitrifies in the fire. Salt ſprings are not known here; however ſalt has been found at the foot of the volcanos or burning mountains. That ſalt might be made here by art, is unqueſtionable. Woods are not frequent on this iſland, though here and there a coppice, or ſmall wood, is to be ſeen: but it is remarkable, that great numbers of ſmall and large trees are driven hither by the ſea, eſpecially on the north coaſt, where, for the moſt part, they lie and rot, the inhabitants having no ſhipping by which they can export or convey this wood for ſale among their countrymen. A great quantity of ſhrubs, on which grow all ſorts of berries, as juniper-berries, black-berries, &c. are burnt every year for charcoal, which the natives uſe in their forges. The common of the country is turf, ſome of which has a very ſtrong ſulphureous ſmell; and even fiſh-bones are burnt in ſome part of this iſland. Very good graſs not only grows in the vallies which border on the lakes and rivers, but alſo in the hollows betwixt the mountains, and ſometimes even on the ſummits of the latter. The fineſt paſtures are in the northern parts of the iſland, where the graſs ſprings up very faſt, and to a great height. The cattle are generally driven amongſt the mountains to graze, where they find good paſture; but the graſs that grows near the habitations of the Icelanders is reſerved for winter fodder. Here is alſo a plentiful variety of ſalubrious and medicinal herbs, as ſcurvy-graſs, ſamphire, angelica, and Berg-graſs, which is a kind of odoriferous moſs, and is very nouriſhing; and great quantities of it are laid up by the inhabitants for occaſional uſe. Bread is but little known here among the commonalty, who make ſhift to live on dried fiſh and fleſh without it. For though a large quantity of meal and bread is imported every year into the harbours of Iceland, the lower claſs of people can purchaſe but little or none of it; the price being adapted only to the more wealthy ſort. Bears are frequently driven on this iſland along with the large flakes of ice from Greenland. But the inhabitants are ſo vigilant and dextrous in deſtroying them, that the only ſpecies of wild beaſts to be ſeen in Iceland are foxes, which are either brown or white. The horſes, as in all other northern countries, are ſmall, but ſtrong and full of mettle, and, excepting thoſe that are broke for the ſaddle, lie in the open air all the year round. In winter they ſubſiſt on what fodder they can ſcrape from under the ice and ſnow. Great numbers of ſheep are to be ſeen in Iceland, and in thoſe parts where graziery is the chief occupation of the inhabitants: it is not uncommon for a man to be maſter of a flock of three, four, or five hundred. In the winter ſeaſon they drive their flocks to ſhelter at night; and in very ſevere weather they keep them in the cotes alſo in the day time. Nature ſeems to have provided a ſhelter for the ſheep in thoſe parts; there being large caves in the earth, into which theſe animals are ſure to retire in ſevere weather. In the winter, when the ſnow is not very deep, and the weather inclinable to be fair and mild, the ſheep are turned out to pick out what they can find under the ſnow. If theſe animals happen to be ſurpriſed at ſuch times by a great ſnow, they immediately form themſelves into a cloſe compact body, by laying their heads together in the centre. In this poſture they are quite covered with the ſnow, and ſometimes are ſo benumbed with cold, as not to be able to help themſelves, till their owner happens to find them, and clears their way out. This is often a work of ſome days; and many times the weight of the incumbent ſnow is ſo great, that the ſheep are cruſhed to pieces by it before they can be relieved. In the extremity of hunger, when they paſs ſome days in ſuch a wretched ſituation, theſe animals have been known to eat one another's wool. Goats are few; ſome of the Iceland oxen and cows have no horns; and in the ſouthern parts, they are fed with fiſh bones, and the water in which the fiſh was boiled. Here are no hogs; dogs are numerous, but very few cats are to be ſeen on this iſland. The keeping of poultry and other tame fowl is ſo expenſive, that very few of them are ſeen here: but plenty of ſwans, wild geeſe, and ducks, among which may be alſo reckoned the eider (the eggs and feathers of which are ſo much valued); ſnipes, woodcocks, &c. are to be met with in Iceland. At certain times an incredible number of eggs of ſea-fowl, which the inhabitants are very fond of, are found along the ſea coaſt. The birds of prey on this iſland are the eagle, hawk, raven, and falcon. Some of the laſt entirely white; others are partly of that colour; and others are brown. Theſe are accounted the beſt falcons in Europe. The rivers, lakes, and bays, with the other parts of the ſea, ſupply the Icelanders with prodigious quantities of various kinds of fiſh. The Icelanders are naturally of a robuſt and vigorous conſtitution, but are ſoon worn out by the continual fatigues and hardſhips they undergo at ſea in their fiſheries; ſo that about the fiftieth year of their age they are generally afflicted with various diſtempers, eſpecially thoſe of the breaſt and lungs: hence very few of them reach to an advanced age. The uſual food of the inhabitants of this iſland is freſh and dried fiſh, milk, oatmeal, and fleſh; but they chiefly live on dried fiſh dreſſed with butter. It is remarkable, that they eat all their proviſions without any ſalt. Their common drink is milk, which they drink by itſelf when ſweet; but mix water with it when it turns ſour. The exports from hence are chiefly dried fiſh, ſalted mutton; a good deal of beef, butter, and train-oil; a great quantity of tallow; coarſe and fine jackets of Wadmal, woollen ſtockings and gloves, red wool, ſheep-ſkins, fox-tails of ſeveral colours, feathers and quills. The imports to Iceland are chiefly iron, horſe's ſhoes, timber, meal, bread, brandy, wine, tobacco, coarſe linen, a few ſilk ſtuffs, and domeſtic utenſils. In the year 1751, in order to enable the Icelanders to improve their manufactures, and to promote trade and commerce, king Frederick V. beſtowed on them a bounty of 10,000 rixdollars, beſides a loan of 5000 more. The Iceland dialect is the ſame with the old Norwegian language, though at preſent it is not quite pure and uncorrupted; however, what they ſtill retain of the ancient Norwegian language is of great uſe to inveſtigate the etymologies, &c. of the ſeveral Northern dialects. As to the hiſtorical particulars relating to this iſland, it owes its being firſt peopled to the tyranny of Harold Pulchricomus, king of Norway, which occaſioned ſeveral perſons of note to quit Norway, and ſeek for a new habitation. Among theſe were particularly two Nordland gentlemen, called Ingulf and Hiorleif, who firſt landed on this iſland in the year 870, and about four years after returned and ſettled here, together with their families and dependents. The number of inhabitants in Iceland is, according to an authentic computation, about 50,000. There are no towns, properly called, on this iſland: however, the houſes of the Iceland company at the two-and-twenty ports, or harbours, and of which there are three or four at each harbour, are dignified with the appellation of towns, though they are only trading places. Iceland, according to the general diviſion, conſiſts of four quarters, which derive their names from the four cardinal points towards which they lie: this diviſion is cauſed by ſo many ridges of mountains that ſeparate the quarters from each other. The north quarter conſtitutes the dioceſe of Hoolum, which contains a hundred and forty churches. The other three quarters are included in the dioceſe of Skaalholt, to which belong a hundred and ſixty-three churches. Long. 10. to 25. W. Greenwich. Lat. 63. 15. to 67. 15. N.

JERSEY, an iſland in the Engliſh Channel, about four leagues from the French coaſt, twelve miles long, and about ſix broad. It is divided into twelve pariſhes, but contains only eight churches. The air is healthy, and the ſoil fertile; though the cultivation of apple-trees for cyder has occaſioned a deficiency of arable land for corn. It has been computed, that 24,000 hogſheads have been made here in one year, part of it, probably, mixed with wine for the Engliſh market. The coaſts abound with excellent fiſh. The number of inhabitants is computed at rather leſs than 20,000, of which 3000 are able to bear arms, and are formed into two regiments. Though ſubjects of England, they are governed by Norman laws, and their language is French. The civil government is entruſted to a bailiff and twelve jurats, under a governor appointed by the crown. The iſland is ſurrounded with rocks, which render navigation dangerous in ſtormy weather, but round are good roads at divers places, with anchorage all along the north ſide in ten and eleven fathoms water. Round towers, with embraſures on the top for ſmall cannon, and loop-holes on their ſides for ſmall arms have been built on this iſland at all the acceſſible places on the coaſt, ſince the year 1781, at which time it was ſurprized by a body of French, under the baron de Rullecourt, who paid dear for their raſhneſs, being every one killed, wounded, or made priſoners, though with the loſs of ſome lives, particularly of the gallant major Pierſon. The entrance to theſe towers is by a door, ſo high up in the wall, as to be out of the reach of man, and is to be aſcended by a ladder, to be drawn up when the defendants are got ſafely within the buildings. In many places are pieces of large cannon mounted, with ſtore-houſes near them for powder and ball. The poor people, from the ſcarcity of fuel, principally burn ſea-weed, called vraic. The principal places are St. Helier and St. Aubin. Long. 2. 11. E. Greenwich. Lat. 49. 7. N.

JERSEY (New), a ſtate of United America, bounded on the north by the ſtate of New York, on the eaſt by the ſea and a part of New York, from which it is ſeparated by Hudſon's River, on the ſouth by the ſea and the Delaware Bay, and on the weſt by the ſtate of Delaware and Pennſylvania, from both which it is ſeparated by the river Delaware. This country is ſaid to have been firſt diſcovered by captain Hudſon, an Engliſhman, but the Swedes were the earlieſt ſettlers. It was afterwards ſeized by the Dutch, and made a part of New Belgium. Being ceded, with New York, to England, Charles II. granted it to his brother, James, duke of York, by whom it was made over to lord Berkley and ſir George Carteret, who ſent over Philip Carteret as governor. Lord Berkley reſigned his right to Penn and others, and Carteret divided the country with them by a ſtraight line from north to ſouth. The eaſt being the part of Carteret, and the weſt of Penn. At the death of Carteret, his ſhare was ſold to a number of perſons with diviſions, which occaſioned diſputes and quarrels. In the year 1702, the owners ſurrendered up their charter to the crown, and the country was united to the government of New York. It was not till the year 1706, that Jerſey was made a ſeparate government. Nevertheleſs, each part had its courts of juſtice, and the general aſſemblies were convoked in Eaſt and Weſt Jerſey alternately. New Jerſey is divided into thirteen counties. The government of this ſtate is now veſted in a governor, legiſlative council, and general aſſembly: the governor is elected by the council and aſſembly; the council is compoſed of one man, choſen annually out of each county by the freeholders; and the general aſſembly is compoſed of three members choſen out of each county in the ſame manner. A great part of the ſoil of New Jerſey is ſandy; ſome barren, and hardly fit for cultivation; near the ſea coaſt it is ſaid to be many feet deep, in ſome places fifty, without rocks or ſtones, and has much the appearance of being artificial; other parts are rich land, producing wheat, rye, Indian corn, barley, oats, flax, &c. with meadows, fit to feed and fatten cattle for the markets of New York and Philadelphia: moſt of the fruits known in England are cultivated with ſucceſs, and cyder of excellent quality is made in moſt parts of the ſtate. Several mines of copper, iron, and lead, have been diſcovered, and wrought with ſucceſs; nor is it without medicinal ſprings. The rivers are numerous, and many of them navigable, at leaſt for ſome miles from their mouths; the principal are the Poſaick, the Rariton, Mullicas, and Maurice. Abundance of mills have been erected on various ſtreams, no leſs than five hundred for grinding corn; beſides others for manufactures. Two conſiderable furnaces are erected for the purpoſe of manufacturing iron, with two rolling and flatting mills, and thirty forges. In the whole ſtate it is ſuppoſed that 1200 tons of bar iron, 1200 tons of pig iron, and 800 of nail rods, are made yearly, beſides hollow-ware, and various other caſt articles. The names of the counties are Hunterdon, Burlington, Bergen, Glouceſter, Middleſex, Morris, Eſſex, Suſſex, Monmouth, Cape May, Cumberland, Somerſet, and Salem: the principal towns are Burlington, Amboy, Brunſwick, and Trenton. In the year 1790, the total number of inhabitants was 184,139, of which 11,423 were ſlaves. The militia of this ſtate conſiſts of 30,000 men. When general Waſhington was retreating through the Jerſeys, almoſt without forces, the militia of this ſtate obeyed his commands, and for ſome time formed almoſt the whole of his army, and the check which the Britiſh troops received at Trenton turned the fortune of the war.

JERUSALEM, a town of the duchy of Courland: 44 miles ESE. Seelburg.

JERUSALEM, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria, celebrated for its excellent wine: 4 miles SSE. Fridaw.

JERUSALEM, a celebrated city of Aſia, and capital of Paleſtine, ſuppoſed to have been founded by Melchiſedeck, and then called Salem, and Solyma. Its firſt buildings were erected on the loweſt part of Mount Sion, that is to ſay, Mount Acra; the northern mountain, and this part, was, therefore, called the Lower City. The Jebuſites, a people of the land of Canaan, made themſelves maſters of it; and it was ſtill ſubject to them at the time the Hebrews were under the protection of Moſes. Theſe people afterwards built on the higheſt part of Mount Sion, that diviſion diſtinguiſhed by the name of the Upper City, and which, by its inhabitants, was called Jebus. They built there, likewiſe, a fortreſs to defend themſelves againſt the attacks of the Hebrews. When the Hebrews entered the Land of Promiſe, under the conduct of Joſhua, in the year 2584, in the diviſion of it, Jeruſalem fell to the lot of the tribe of Benjamin. After the death of Joſhua, which happened in the year 2601, the lower city was taken and burned by the tribe of Judah: but not being able to make themſelves maſters of the upper city, to which the Jebuſites had retired for ſhelter, the latter recovered the lower city, and reſtored it to its former condition. It appears, that the city of Jeruſalem belonged ſometimes to the tribe of Benjamin and ſometimes to the tribe of Judah; but according to the diſtribution of the land of promiſe made by Joſhua, it certainly, as before mentioned, fell to the lot of the tribe of Benjamin. The glory of entirely ſubjecting the Jebuſites, however, was reſerved for David, who, in the year 2988, expelled theſe people, ſeized their fortreſs and city, and called the latter, after his own name, The City of David. The city then occupied two mountains, that is to ſay, Mount Sion, which formed the upper city, and Acra, which formed the lower city. Theſe David had already ſurrounded with a ſingle wall, though they were divided from each other; for the city of Sion was incloſed by a ſeparate wall, and between it and the inferior city, there were vallies, and two other little hills. In the year of the world, 3009, Jeruſalem was poſſeſſed by Abſalom, the ſon of David; but the ſame year it again fell into the hands of David. After David's death, in the year 3021, Solomon ſurrounded Jeruſalem with much ſtronger and better walls. He erected, alſo, various new edifices in the neighbourhood of Mount Bezeta and Mount Moriah, ſo that a third city, as it were, was ſeen to ariſe; but as they were incloſed by one wall, they were, therefore, called by one name. Each of theſe cities being, however, ſurrounded by its own particular wall, we may ſay, that Jeruſalem was fortified by three walls. In the year of the world, 3023, the fourth of the reign of Solomon, and the 28th of his age, the Temple was begun; and in the ſpace of ſeven years, that noble fabric, admired by all nations for its grandeur, magnificence, and riches, was completely finiſhed. During the whole reign of this prince, which was forty years, the city continued to increaſe in ſplendour, and to be in a very flouriſhing ſtate. In the fourth year of the reign of Rehoboam, the ſon of Solomon, that is to ſay, in the year of the world, 3046, the city of Jeruſalem was beſieged and taken by Shiſhak, or, perhaps, Seſoſtris, king of Egypt, who afterwards concluded a peace with Rehoboam, but carried away the treaſures of the temple, as well as thoſe of the royal palace. Joaſh, king of Iſrael, advanced to Jeruſalem, entered the city, deſtroyed part of its walls, plundered the temple, and the royal palace, and returned to Samaria. About the year 3425, Pharaoh Necho II. king of Egypt, entered Jeruſalem, and captured Jehoahaz, king of Judah, who had been raiſed to the throne by the Hebrew people, in the room of his father, Joſiah, who was killed the ſame year in a battle fought with the king of Egypt. Jehoahaz was carried away captive to that country, and the ſovereignty conferred upon Jehoiakim, who was obliged to pay a certain tribute impoſed on the Hebrew nation; ſo that Jeruſalem became then tributary to the king of Egypt. In the fourth year after Pharaoh Necho had given the crown of Judah to Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar II. king of Babylon, beſieged Jeruſalem, which now fell under the dominion of the Chaldeans. Nebuchadnezzar reſtored it, however, to Jehoiakim, on condition of paying a certain tribute, as he had done to the king of Egypt, in order to ſhow the dependent ſtate of the city and the Hebrew people. Jehoiakim not being able to endure this ſervitude, attempted, three years after, to free himſelf from the yoke; but the king of Chaldea ſent a powerful army againſt him, which laid waſte the country of Judea. Jehoiakim himſelf being taken, was put to death in the year 3436, and a great number of priſoners were conducted as ſlaves, to Babylon. The ſame year, Jehoiakim was ſucceeded by his ſon, Jehoiachin, who reigned in Jeruſalem only three months. Nebuchadnezzar being apprehenſive that he would revenge his father's death, laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, compelled Jehoiachin to ſurrender, and carried him away captive to Babylon, together with his mother, his wife, his children, and a great many people, leaving only a very ſmall number of inhabitants in the land, which was now reduced to a very deplorable ſituation. Upon this occaſion, Nebuchadnezzar ſeized upon all the riches of the temple and royal palace, and cut in pieces thoſe golden veſſels which Solomon had cauſed to be made for the ſervice of the Lord. In the room of Jehoiachin, Nebuchadnezzar eſtabliſhed Mattaniah king of Jeruſalem, and gave him the name of Zedekiah. This prince, however, in imitation of his predeceſſors, rebelled againſt the king of Chaldea, who ſent an army againſt the city of Jeruſalem, and having made himſelf maſter of it, in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, took the king priſoner, and after putting out his eyes, carried him away as a captive. Nebuchadnezzar being then at Riblah, a city of Syria, ſent his general, Nabuzaradan, to deſtroy the city of Jeruſalem entirely. The walls of it were, therefore, razed, the royal palace and the temple demoliſhed, their riches and ornaments tranſported to Babylon, and the people (a few huſbandmen and vine-dreſſers excepted) were carried away into ſlavery. This event took place in the year of the world, 3447, an epoch memorable in the hiſtory of Jeruſalem. Cyrus, king of Perſia, who had conquered the kingdoms of Aſſyria and Babylon, in the year of the world, 3516, and the firſt of his reign, ſet the Hebrews at liberty, after they had been ſeventy years captive in Babylon; reſtored to them the ſacred veſſels carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, and gave them leave at the ſame time to rebuild the temple. The Hebrews employed twenty years in conſtructing this new edifice; for they were continually interrupted in the work by their enemies, the Samaritans. Nehemiah, one of the Hebrew captives, who afterwards became ſovereign of that people, being cup bearer to Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Perſia, and in great favour with the court, obtained leave to go to Jeruſalem, and rebuild the walls of that city, which, though entirely deſtroyed, he reſtored, with much labour, in the ſpace of twelve years and four months. This happened in the year of the world, 3600, and in the 82d after the Hebrew people had been ſet at liberty by Cyrus. After Nehemiah, the city of Jeruſalem enjoyed peace till the year 3722. In this year, Alexander the Great being engaged in the ſiege of Tyre, demanded aſſiſtance from the Jews; but the chief prieſt refuſed his requeſt, informing him at the ſame time, that he had ſworn to Darius not to take any part with his enemies. Alexander, offended at this anſwer, repaired to Jeruſalem, after he had conquered Tyre and the city of Gaza, fully reſolved to be revenged both on it and its inhabitants; but being met by a multitude of people, all dreſſed in white, the prieſts arrayed in their robes, and the high-prieſt with a garment of purple and gold, having on his head a tiara with a plate of gold above it, upon which was inſcribed the name of the Lord, his paſſion immediately ſubſided; and approaching the high-prieſt, he offered his adorations to God, after which he ſhowed every mark of reſpect to Jaddus, and ſaluted all the Hebrews. Ptolemy Soter, the ſon of Ptolemy Lagus, who was one of Alexander's ſucceſſors, and who, in the diviſion of the empire, had got Egypt for his ſhare, wiſhing to extend his conqueſt in Syria and Phœnicia, turned his thoughts towards Jeruſalem. In the year 3733, therefore, he ſurpriſed the city, on the ſabbath day, having entered it under a pretence of offering up ſacrifice, and taking a great number of priſoners in Judea, carried them along with him to Egypt. Antiochus Epiphanes, in the year 3882, beſieged the city, plundered it of all its gold and valuable effects, put to death 80,000 of the inhabitants of Judea, made 40,000 of them ſlaves, and ſold 40,000 more. In the year 3885, the ſacrifices were interrupted; abomination entered into the houſe of the Lord; and the altars were profaned by the ſtatutes of Jupiter Olympius being erected over it. This calamity happened 438 years after Jeruſalem had ſuffered under Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. After the laſt deſtruction of the city of Jeruſalem, under Antiochus Epiphanes, it found a powerful defender in Judas Maccabeus, who, in the year of the world 3888, having ſucceeded his father Mattathias as high prieſt of the Hebrews, overcame in various battles the celebrated generals of Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria; and after re-eſtabliſhing the city, and purifying the temple, in the year 3889, made a dedication of the new altar. In the year 3890, Antiochus Eupator, king of Syria, ſon and ſucceſſor to Antiochus Epiphanes, laid ſiege to Jeruſalem. A peace being afterwards concluded, he was admitted into the city by Judas Maccabeus; but this faithleſs prince, breaking his oath, cauſed the wall between the temple and the citadel, which defended the former from the attacks of the Syrians, to be entirely demoliſhed. In the year 3911, Simon Maccabeus fortified Jeruſalem, by erecting ſtrong and high towers on the walls. The fort at this time was in the hands of the Syro-Macedonians; but Simon took and deſtroyed it, that it might never again fall into the poſſeſſion of the enemy. This citadel had kept Jeruſalem twenty-ſix years dependant on the king of Syria. John Hyrcanus, ſon of Simon Maccabeus, entered upon the governorſhip and high-prieſthood, after the death of his father, in 3919; and the ſame year Antiochus Sideres, incenſed at the loſſes which he had ſuffered by Simon Maccabeus, declared war againſt Hyrcanus, and beſieged Jeruſalem, deſtroyed the walls of the city, and then retired with all his forces. During the reign of Herod the Great, otherwiſe called the Aſcalonite, Jeruſalem received many additions and embelliſhments. In the year 4030, he conſtructed a ſuperb royal palace, a theatre and an amphitheatre, to celebrate various kinds of games in honour of Auguſtus. Herod likewiſe conceived a deſign of rebuilding the temple, or rather of enlarging that which had been erected after the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, and accordingly began his work, in the eighteenth year of his reign, and completed it in eight years. Under the emperor Tiberius, Pontius Pilate being preſident of Judea for the Romans, our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, at the age of thirty-three, was condemned to death, on the falſe accuſation of the Jews, and crucified on Mount Calvary, which was then without the walls of the city. In the year 66 of the Chriſtian æra, and the twelfth of the reign of Nero, Geſſius Florus, the procurator of Judea, had by his injuſtice and extortion reduced that rich country to a miſerable condition: and adding cruelty to rapine, was the principal cauſe of the Hebrews attempting to throw off the Roman yoke. Being declared rebels, they began to commit every kind of iniquity. The Romans employed the ſevereſt puniſhment to reduce theſe people to obedience, but ſtill without effect. Having attacked Ceſtius Gallus, the governor of Syria, they obliged him to retire; and this ſucceſs inſpired them with freſh hopes and courage. The flames of war being thus kindled in Judea, Nero entruſted the management of it to his general, Veſpaſian, who, accompanied by his ſon Titus, and a powerful army, arrived in Syria, in the year 67 of the Chriſtian æra. Veſpaſian ſoon after being choſen emperor, ſent orders to his ſon Titus to continue the war againſt the Hebrews, and ſet out for Rome, where he arrived amidſt the acclamations of the populace, in the year 70 of the Chriſtian æra. Jeruſalem at this time was torn by different contending factions, and a prey to all the miſeries of a civil war within its own walls. Nothing was ſeen throughout the whole city but ſlaughter, tumult, and murder; while patriotiſm was made a pretence for committing every ſpecies of atrocity. In this miſerable ſtate was the city of Jeruſalem and all Judea, when, on the 14th of April, in the year 70, Titus undertook the ſiege of the former, having encamped at the diſtance of ſeven ſtadia, or a mile, from it. On the 4th of May, Titus made himſelf maſter of the firſt wall of Jeruſalem, and cauſed a great part of it towards the north to be demoliſhed. Notwithſtanding this ſucceſs, he offered very favourable terms to the beſieged, if they would ſubmit, but his offer was rejected. Five days after, he took the ſecond wall, from which he was however repulſed; but in four days more he again got it into his poſſeſſion, and demoliſhed what remained of it in the northern quarter. Having failed in his attempt to batter down the third wall, Titus made new propoſals to the Hebrews, through the medium of Flavius Joſephus, who had been taken priſoner, and after receiving his liberty had attached himſelf to the Romans, and was with Titus in his encampment. The greater part of the people were inclined to accept the eaſy conditions propoſed them by Joſephus in the name of the emperor, but being oppoſed by ſome zealots, Joſephus was treated with every mark of indignity and reproach. After this behaviour, there remained no more mercy for the Hebrews. Titus cauſed the hands of thoſe who had voluntarily ſought ſhelter in the Roman camp to be cut off, and ſent them back to the city, and others were crucified in the ſight of their countrymen. Famine, in the mean time, began to make dreadful havock among the people. Of this calamity, and the diſtreſſes it occaſioned, Joſephus gives ſuch a pathetic account as cannot fail of exciting horror. He tells us that the effects of hunger were ſo great, that a noble lady, called Mary, devoured the fleſh of her own ſon; and that this action appeared ſo unnatural to Titus, that he ſwore he would bury the remembrance of it under the ruins of Jeruſalem. In order to haſten the capture of the city, he cauſed all the trees which were within the diſtance of ſome miles from Jeruſalem to be cut down, and employed them in his machines and military works. Having made every neceſſary diſpoſition for continuing his operations with vigour, he applied his battering rams to the third wall, that is to ſay, the wall encloſing the fortreſs, and made himſelf maſter of the tower called Antonia. The Romans being deſirous of getting poſſeſſion of the Temple without deſtroying it, were obliged to ſuſtain a fierce conflict in it: but a ſoldier, inſtigated by ſome unknown motive, threw a burning torch into the northern part of it, where there was a great quantity of combuſtible materials, by which means it was ſet on fire. This magnificent building, therefore, was reduced to aſhes, and the Hebrews, with great grief and ſorrow, ſaw a monument deſtroyed which was the principal object that had animated their hopes, and awakened their courage. In ſhort, on the ſecond of September, in the year 71 of the Chriſtian æra, and the ſecond of the reign of Veſpaſian, the city of Jeruſalem fell entirely into the hands of Titus. It was then given up to be plundered by the ſoldiers, and moſt of its inhabitants were put to the ſword. According to the order of Titus, the city was deſtroyed to its foundations; and even the ruins of the temple were demoliſhed. Joſephus ſays, that the number of priſoners taken during the whole time of the war was 97,000; and that the number killed in the city during the ſame period amounted to 1,100,000; but Tacitus who lived in the firſt century, in the time of Veſpaſian and Titus, heard it reported, that the number of the beſieged, including thoſe of every age and ſex, was only 600,000. Notwithſtanding the deſtruction of their country, a good many Jews remained in it, and even in Jeruſalem, or rather in new buildings which they erected amidſt the ruins of the city; but they now paid tribute to the Romans, and were entirely ſubject to their laws. In the year 118, they attempted to rebel, but were ſoon overcome by Tinius Rufus, the Roman preſident in Paleſtine. On account of the turbulent diſpoſition of theſe people, Adrian, it appears, highly incenſed at their conduct, reſolved the ſame year to level the city of Jeruſalem with the ground; that is to ſay, thoſe new buildings erected by the Hebrews, to deſtroy three towers left by Titus for the convenience of the Roman garriſon; and to ſow ſalt on the ground on which the place had ſtood. Whatever may have been the cauſe that induced Adrian to make this devaſtation, and to ſhew ſo much reſentment againſt the remains of a wretched nation, he fulfilled the prophecy of our Saviour, who foretold that neither in the city nor the temple ſhould one ſtone be left upon another. This therefore may be called the final deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which took place forty-ſeven years after that of Titus. Adrian, deſirous of building a new city on the ancient ſite of Jeruſalem, began this enterpriſe in the year 119 of the Chriſtian æra, and the ſecond of his reign. It was then called Ælja, after his own name Ælius, and formed a Roman colony. The Chriſtians, who ever ſince the time of Jeſus Chriſt had continued to increaſe, and to inhabit Jeruſalem, and the new city of Ælia, or Ælia Capitolina, ſometimes protected and ſometimes perſecuted by the Roman emperors, began at length, in the time of Conſtantine the Great, to enjoy a little tranquillity. From his reign we may date the real eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity. He extended his Chriſtian care even as far as the Eaſt. The city of Jeruſalem, or rather the city of Ælia, experienced alſo the aſſiſtance of his benevolent hand; for he made it revive, by erecting churches and other buildings in it; and in this he was aſſiſted by his mother, Helen, who went thither in perſon. It is commonly ſaid that under the reign of Conſtantine the Great, the name of Ælia Capitolina was changed, and that of Jeruſalem ſubſtituted in its room. The church of Jeruſalem enjoyed the high honour of being the moſt ancient of all, and it has therefore been called the firſt in the world; its firſt biſhop was the apoſtle St. James the Leſs, who began to govern it in the year 34; and continued to do ſo till the year 62, when he ſuffered martyrdom. In the year 363, the emperor Julian, a declared enemy to Chriſtianity, ordered the temple to be rebuilt, on the foundations of that deſtroyed by Titus; and gave the direction of this work to Alipius, who had been a prætorian præfect in Britain, but all his endeavours were fruſtrated by earthquakes, flames of fire, and other ſtrange and miraculous appearances. In 378, pilgrimages to Jeruſalem, and journeys thither for the purpoſe of viſiting the holy places of that city, began to be very frequent. Many perſons celebrated for the nobility of their birth, and the fame of their ſanctity, repaired to it with that view; and the number of monks who inhabited the environs continued daily to increaſe. In the year 614, the Perſians came before Jeruſalem, which having fallen into their hands, was ſacked and plundered. Ninety thouſand Chriſtians, of both ſexes and of all ages and conditions, were made ſlaves in this war, and ſold by the Perſians to the Jews, who, contrary to the laws of humanity, butchered them in a cruel manner. In the year 628, Jeruſalem was reſtored to the emperor Heraclius, who baniſhed all the Jews, and interdicted them from approaching within three miles of it. In the year 636, Jeruſalem was taken by the caliph Omar; when the provinces of Syria and Paleſtine fell entirely into the hands of the Saracens; the city of Jeruſalem was for ſeveral centuries governed by the caliphs. The government now became entirely Mahometan; and Mahometaniſm was the prevailing religion of the country. The Turks, after they had made themſelves maſters of Damaſcus, and ſubdued the whole country around, carried their arms againſt Jeruſalem, which they likewiſe took, in the year 1076 of the Chriſtian æra, and of the Hegira 469. At the time when Jeruſalem was under the dominion of the Turks, the Chriſtians who reſided in it were expoſed to ſo great afflictions, that their ſituation was worſe than when ſubject to the government of the Saracens. Many of the Weſtern Chriſtians, however, ſtill continued to viſit the holy places; but for this indulgence they were obliged to pay a very heavy tax. In the year 1093, among the many pilgrims who reſorted to Jeruſalem, there was a French monk, of the city of Amiens, in Picardy, named Peter, who has ſince been diſtinguiſhed by the name of Peter the Hermit. Peter departed from Syria in the year 1095, in a merchant veſſel bound for Bari, in Apulia; and on landing there immediately went to pope Urban II. to whom he delivered letters from the patriarch and Chriſtians of Jeruſalem, requeſting his aſſiſtance and ſupport. At the ſame time he laid before him, in the moſt pathetic terms, the unhappy ſituation of thoſe people; and informed him in what manner they were inſulted and oppreſſed by the Mahometans. Theſe letters, and the repreſentations of Peter the Hermit, made ſuch an impreſſion on the pontiff's heart, that he reſolved from that moment to do every thing in his power to recover the Holy Land. Peter then went to various courts, and applied to different princes, with a view of engaging them in the ſame deſign; and in every place in which he paſſed he preached up the cruſades. The city was taken the 15th of July, 1099, the third year after the Chriſtians had ſet out from Europe to recover Paleſtine. Eight days after the city was taken, all the Chriſtian princes, generals, and commanders aſſembled and elected, for king of Jeruſalem, Godfrey of Bouillon, duke of Lorrain, who by his piety, prudence, and valour, was judged moſt worthy of that dignity. From the time that the city of Jeruſalem remained under the power of the Weſtern Chriſtians, that is to ſay, from the 15th of July, 1099, to the end of the year 1162, Jeruſalem was governed by five Latin kings, and the church by eight patriarchs. On the death of the laſt king, Baldwin III. the affairs of the Weſtern Chriſtians in Syria and Paleſtine began greatly to decline. The kingdom of Jeruſalem, conſidered in its whole extent, was already divided into four parts; that is to ſay, that which was properly called the kingdom of Jeruſalem, the country of Edeſſa, the principality of Antioch, and the county of Tripoli. Jeruſalem, in its modern ſtate, called by the Turks Cudſembaric, and Cudſcherif, is reduced by their oppreſſive tyranny into the condition of a poor thinly inhabited town, of about three miles at moſt in circumference; it is ſituated on a rocky mountain, with very ſteep aſcent on all ſides except to the north; the vallies at the bottom are deep, and at ſome diſtance environed with hills. The ſoil is for the moſt part ſtony, yet affords corn, wine, and olives, where cultivated; but ſcarce any thing except graſs, heath, and other ſpontaneous herbs and ſhrubs, which are left to run up to ſeed, grow at ſome diſtance from the city. Long. 53. 24. JIDDA, a ſeaport of Arabia Felix, on the Red Sea, in the Sherriffate of Mecca, firſt ſurrounded with walls, in the year 1514, by El Guri, ſultan of Egypt, to protect it from the Portugueſe: the walls are now in a ſtate of decay. It is ſituated in a barren, ſandy diſtrict, and is without water. Jidda, has been always a part of the dominions of the Sherriffe of Mecca. The Turkiſh ſultan ſends, indeed, a pacha to this city; but he is not abſolute ſovereign of it. The ſupreme authority is ſhared between the Sherriffe and the Turkiſh governor. The latter is changed every year; and accordingly refuſes ſometimes to obey the pacha. The Sherriffe keeps an officer, who is called his viſier, to repreſent him in this city: and on this viſier, ſolely, do all ſuch of the inhabitants of Jidda, as are the Sherriffe's ſubjects, depend. This officer is always choſen out of the family of the Sherriffe, from among thoſe who aſpire to the ſovereign power. A deſſcendant of a noble Arab family, would not deign to appear before a judge of a meaner birth. The revenue ariſing from the cuſtoms is ſhared between the ſultan and the ſherriffe; upon which account the kiaja and the viſier always attend together, when goods are examined. The dues of cuſtom are fixed at 10 per cent. upon the value of the goods, eſtimated arbitrarily by the cuſtom-houſe officers; ſo that they may be conſidered as equal, in reality to 12 or 15 per cent. The Engliſh, however, are particularly favoured, even more than the ſubjects of the ſultan: they pay only 8 per cent. and are ſuffered to diſcharge this in goods, whereas all others muſt produce money. Although the trade of Jidda is ſo conſiderable, yet this city is no more than a mart between Egypt and India. The ſhips from Suez, ſeldom proceed farther than this port; and thoſe from India are not ſuffered to advance to Suez. The circumjacent country affords nothing but Taif almonds for an object of traffic; of theſe, indeed, the Engliſh carry 500,000 weight a-year to India. Balm of Mecca is alſo brought hither from the neighbourhood of Medina, as an article of exportation. The imports are greater, becauſe both Mecca and Medina are to be ſupplied from this market. Large quantities of corn, rice, lentiles, ſugar, oil, &c. are imported from Egypt, without which this part of Arabia could not poſſibly be inhabited. All goods from Europe come alſo by the way of Egypt; and on the other hand, thoſe which are brought hither from India paſs generally into Egypt: 170 miles S. Medina. Lat. 21. 28. N.

ILA, or Ilay, one of the weſtern iſlands of Scotland, in the North Sea, about ſix leagues from the north coaſt of Ireland, and four from the coaſt of Argyle county in Scotland; the form is irregular, perhaps not very unlike a horſeſhoe, with the toe part pointed, being hollowed towards the ſouth, by a large bay called Loch Indaal. The circumference about fifty miles. It is ſeparated from Jura, by a narrow ſtrait, to which it gives the name of Sound. It is generally mountainous, and contains ſome mines of lead mixed with copper: ſtrata of iron called Bog Ore, with veins of emery. In ſome places ſmall veins of quickſilver have been found. The produce of corn is not conſiderable, and conſiſts principally in bere and oats, with ſome flax: ſome wheat has been ſown within a few years; but the corn raiſed is not ſufficient for the conſumption of the inhabitants, which may probably be owing to a conſiderable conſumption in the diſtilleries. Great numbers of cattle are bred, and many annually exported. The number of inhabitants is computed to be between 7 and 8000, of whom about 700 are employed in weaving and fiſhing. The air is not eſteemed equally healthy with Jura.

INDIANA, a tract of country, ſituated on the Ohio, in the ſtate of Virginia, claimed by William Trent, and others; being granted by the Indians, as a compenſation for loſs ſuſtained from them in the year 1768. The goods taken away were valued at, 85,915l. 10s. 8d. New York currency. This claim has been laid before Congreſs, and in ſome degree allowed, but it does not appear to be yet finally determined.

INDIANS, the name by which the aborigines of America are generally called. Theſe people are ſcattered through the extent of the two prodigious continents, and divided into an infinite number of nations and tribes; differing very little from each other in their manners and cuſtoms, and all form a very ſtriking picture of antiquity. The Indians, or people of America, are tall and ſtraight in their limbs, beyond the proportion of moſt nations. Their bodies are ſtrong; but of ſuch a ſpecies of vigour, as is rather adapted to endure much hardſhip, than to continue long at any ſervile work: it is the ſtrength of a beaſt of prey, rather than that of a beaſt of burthen. Their bodies and heads are flattiſh, the effect of art. Their features are regular, but their countenances fierce; their hair long, black, lank, and as ſtrong as that of a horſe, but no beards. The colour of their ſkins a reddiſh brown, admired among them, and improved by the conſtant uſe of bear's fat and paint. Their only occupations are hunting and war; agriculture is left to the women; merchandiſe they deſpiſe. There are no people amongſt whom the laws of hoſpitality are more ſacred, or executed with more generoſity and good will. Their houſes, their proviſions, even their young women, are not enough to oblige a gueſt. But to the enemies of his country, or to thoſe who have privately offended, the Indian is implacable. No length of time is ſufficient to allay his reſentment; no diſtance of place great enough to protect the object. The Indians have ſcarce any temples among them; though we hear, indeed, of ſome, and thoſe extremely magnificent, amongſt the ancient Mexicans and Peruvians: but, thoſe were civilized nations; they hold the exiſtence of a Supreme Being, eternal and incorruptible, who has power over all. Satisfied with owning this, which is traditionary amongſt them, they give him no ſort of worſhip. Though without religion, they abound in ſuperſtitions; as it is common for thoſe to do whoſe ſubſiſtence depends, like their's, upon fortune. Being great obſervers of omens and dreams, and pryers into futurity with great eagerneſs, they abound in diviners, augurs, and magicians, whom they rely much upon in all matters that concern them, whether of health, war, or hunting. Liberty, in its fulleſt extent, is the darling paſſion of the Indians: to this, they ſacrifice every thing. This is what makes a life of uncertainty and want ſupportable to them; and their education is directed in ſuch a manner, as to cheriſh it to the utmoſt. This free diſpoſition is general; and though ſome tribes are found in America with a head, whom we call king, his power is rather perſuaſive than coercive; and he is reverenced as a father, more than feared as a monarch; he has no guards, no priſons, no officers of juſtice. But among the Five Nations, or the Iroquois, the moſt celebrated common-wealth of North America, and in ſome other nations, there is no other qualification abſolutely neceſſary for their head men, but age, with experience, and ability in their affairs. Every thing is tranſacted among them with much ceremony; which, in a barbarous people, is neceſſary: for nothing elſe could hinder all their affairs from going into confuſion: beſides, that the ceremonies contribute to fix all tranſactions the better in their memory. In order to help this, they have belts of ſmall ſhells, or beads of different colours, which have all a different meaning, according to their colour or arrangement. At the end of every matter which they diſcourſe upon, when they treat with a foreign ſtate, they deliver one of theſe belts. If they ſhould omit this ceremony, what they ſay paſſes for nothing. Theſe belts are carefully treaſured up in each town, and ſerve as the public records of the nation; and to theſe they occaſionally have recourſe, when any conteſts happen between them and their neighbours, for neither will they look upon what our commiſſioners ſay to be of any weight, unleſs ſome preſent acccompanies each propoſal. The ſame council of their elders which regulates whatever regards the external policy of the ſtate, has the charge likewiſe of its internal peace and order. The loſs of any one of their people, whether by natural death or by war, is lamented by the whole town he belongs to. The whole village attends the body to the grave, which is interred, being dreſſed in the moſt ſumptuous ornaments. With the body of the deceaſed are placed his bow and arrows, with what he valued moſt in his life, and proviſions for the long journey which he is to take; for they univerſally hold the immortality of the ſoul, though their idea of it is groſs. Though the women in America have generally the laborious part of the economy upon themſelves, yet they are far from being the ſlaves which they appear to be; and are not all ſubject to the great ſubordination in which they are placed in countries where they ſeem to be more reſpected. No nations of the Indians are without a regular marriage, in which there are many ceremonies: the principal of which is the bride's preſenting the bridegroom with a plate of their corn. Though incontinent before wedlock, the chaſtity of their women after marriage is remarkable. When the ancients among the Indians have reſolved upon a war, they do not always declare what nation they are determined to attack, that the enemy upon whom they really intend to fall may be off his guard. Nay they even ſometimes let years paſs over, without committing any act of hoſtility, that the vigilance of all may be unbent, by the long continuance of the watch, and the uncertainty of the danger. In the mean time, they are not idle at home; the principal captain ſummons the youths of the town to which he belongs: the war kettle is ſet on the fire, the war ſongs and dances begin: the hatchet is ſent to all the villages of the ſame nation, and to all its allies: the fire catches, and the war ſongs are heard in all parts. The qualities in an Indian war are vigilance and attention, to give and to avoid ſurpriſe; alſo patience, and ſtrength, to indure the intolerable fatigues and hardſhips which always attend it. The fate of their priſoners is the moſt ſevere of all: during the greateſt part of their journey homewards, they ſuffer no injury, but when they arrive at the territories of the conquering ſtate, or at thoſe of their allies, the people from every village meet them, and think that they ſhow their attachment to their friends by their barbarous treatment of the unhappy priſoners. It is uſual to offer a ſlave to each houſe that has loſt a friend, giving the preference according to the greatneſs of the loſs. The perſon who has taken the captive attends him to the door of the cottage to which he is delivered; and with him he gives a belt of wampum, to ſhew that he has fulfilled the purpoſe of the expedition, in ſupplying the loſs of a citizen; when he is either preſerved and entertained as a friend, or put to death with the moſt horrid torments. Don Ulloa in his celebrated Voyage to South America, draws a very different and at the ſame time a very melancholy picture of the Indians, in the province of Quito, where the cruel uſage of their Spaniſh maſters has quite deſtroyed their former ſpirit and love of liberty, and rendered them ſtupid, lazy, and contemptible. Nothing can move them, or alter their minds; even intereſt here loſes all its power; it being common for them to decline doing ſome little act of ſervice, though offered a very conſiderable reward. Fear cannot ſtimulate, reſpect induce, or puniſhment compel them; being proof againſt every attempt to rouſe them from their natural indolence, in which they ſeem to look down with contempt on the wiſeſt of mortals. A great part of the barbariſm and ruſticity of the minds of the Indians, muſt, indeed, be imputed to the want of culture; for they who in ſome parts have enjoyed that advantage, are found to be no leſs rational than other men: and if they do not attain to all the politeneſs of civilized nations, they at leaſt think properly. The Indians of the miſſion of Paraguay, are, among others, remarkable inſtances of this; who from an ambulatory and ſavage manner of living, have been reduced to order, reaſon and religion. The diſeaſe which makes the greateſt havoc among them, is the ſmall-pox, which is ſo fatal, that few eſcape it; accordingly it is looked upon in this country as a peſtilence. This diſtemper is not continual, as in other nations; ſeven, eight, or more years paſſing without its being heard of: but when it prevails, towns and villages are ſoon thinned of their inhabitants.

INVERKEITHING, a ſea-port town of Scotland, and a royal borough, in the county of Fife, on the north ſide of the Forth. Before the entrance of the harbour there is a large and ſafe bay, which affords excellent ſhelter for ſhips in all winds. Here his majeſty's ſhips of war ſometimes come from Leith-roads and ride at anchor, to avoid the winter ſtorms; and merchant ſhips from the Mediterranean formerly uſed to perform quarantine here. The harbour itſelf is a ſmall bay; at the mouth of which, upon the weſt ſide, there lies a large Dutch built veſſel, as a lazaretto, where, inſtead of detaining ſhips from foreign ports, the particular goods, in which any infection may be ſuppoſed to lodge, are immediately received, aired under the inſpection of a proper officer, and delivered, within a limited time, to the owners, by the expreſs orders of the cuſtom-houſe. At the head of the bay is a quay, the proper place for landing and receiving goods. The depth of water, at ſpring tides, is thirteen and ſometimes fifteen feet. It was deepened within theſe few years, and a narrow channel cut farther down to admit ſhips up to it. This is kept pretty clear by the rivulet that runs through it at low tide. Another quay is now building, with great improvements, to accommodate the ſhipping. There are here ſometimes between forty and fifty veſſels from different places waiting for coals, eſpecially in the winter ſeaſon. Several ſhips belong to this place; but none of any conſiderable burthen. Some of them ſail to foreign parts, and the reſt are chiefly employed in the coal and coaſting trade. Not far from the town a lead-mine was diſcovered, belonging to the earl of Morton: and a herring fiſhery has lately been begun on the coaſt: 3½ miles SE. Dunfermline, and 9 WNW. Leith.

INVERNESS, a ſea-port town of Scotland, in the county of the ſame name, at the mouth of the river Neſs. It is a royal borough, holding its firſt charter from Malcolm Canmore. The harbour is ſafe and commodious. Seven veſſels belong to it, of 400 to 500 tons; and nine boats, manned by ſix men each. The veſſels trade principally to London, carrying fiſh, ſkins, and the manufacture of the country, bringing back grocery, &c. The manufactures of the town are leather, coarſe hempen cloth, bagging, ſacking, &c. linen, and thread. The memorable battle of Culloden was fought near this town. There are three national or Preſbyterian churches, beſides one of Epiſcopalians, a place of worſhip for Methodiſts, &c. The number of inhabitants, in the year 1791, was 5017, beſides 1823 in the pariſh, making in the whole 7930: 57 miles W. Banff. Long. 0. 55. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 28. N.

INVERNESSSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north by the county of Roſs, on the eaſt by the counties of Murray and Nairn, on the ſouth by Perth and Argyle, and on the weſt by the ſea. It is divided into three diſtricts, Invernesſſhire Proper, Lochaber, and Badenock; and includes ſeveral of the Hebrides, or Weſtern Iſlands, viz. Skye, Barra, North and South Viſt, Benbecula, St. Kilda, Rona, Raſa, Rum, and ſome others, with the peninſula of Harris. Independent of the iſlands, it meaſures 75 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 45 from north to ſouth. It abounds with oak and fir timber, and mines of iron ore; the paſtures feed numbers of cattle, and the lochs are well furniſhed with fiſh; but the corn produced is trifling: on the whole, it is reckoned one of the leaſt fertile counties of Scotland. The principal rivers are the Neſs and the Spey. Inverneſs is the capital.

INVERURY, a town of Scotland, and a royal borough, in the county of Aberdeen, ſituated on the conflux of the Don aud the Ury. It is ſaid to have been created a royal borough by Robert Bruce, on occaſion of a victory obtained by him over the earl of Buchan, who commanded for the king of England, but it does not appear to have ever been a place of much commerce, or a manufacturing town. The number of inhabitants is about 700: 10 miles NW. Aberdeen, and 51 NNE. Dundee.

JOANNA, or Hinzuan, one of the Comora iſlands, about thirty miles long, and fifteen broad. The ſea coaſts of this iſland are chiefly in the hands of Arabians, who have obtained a ſettlement, and drove the original natives to the interior and mountainous parts, though the latter are double the number of the former. Though not the largeſt, it is the principal and demands tribute of the others. The iſland produces oranges, lemons, limes, cocoanuts, yams, bananas, pine-apples, with ſome antiſcorbutic plants, the principal of which is purſlane: the inhabitants are fond of the Engliſh and the Engliſh language, and moſt of them claim the title of lord, duke, or prince, and on the arrival of a veſſel, ſolicit cuſtom, or preſents, under thoſe characters, hoping to obtain ſomething more ſubſtantial. Long. 44. 48. JOHAN-GEORGEN-STADT, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and circle of Erzgeburg, founded in the year 1654, by the Proteſtant miners, who were driven out of the little Bohemian mine-town of Platten, and was named after the elector, John George I. On the corn which is cultivated near the town, the inhabitants would hardly be able to ſubſiſt, even for a few days; but on the other hand, their breed of cattle here is good; the women weave lace, and the men apply themſelves to mining. At firſt, tin only was found here, but in 1662, a ſilver vein was diſcovered at this place, and upon that a ſilver hut eſtabliſhed, though at preſent the ſilver ore dug here is delivered in at Freyberg. Copper ore is ſometimes found, and cobalt. Emery, alſo, is prepared here, beſides other minerals, which are found at this place: 7 miles S. Schwarzenberg.

IPSHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and principality of Culmbach: 17 miles NNW. Anſpach.

IPSWICH, a town of England, in the county of Suffolk, on the river Orwell, about twelve miles from the German Sea. It is ancient, and was formerly of much greater note than at preſent; the harbour was more convenient, and had a greater number of veſſels. It at preſent contains twelve pariſh churches, and is governed by two bailiffs, recorder, twelve portmen, &c. The bailiffs and four of the portmen are juſtices of the peace. In the year 991, Ipſwich was ravaged by the Danes, and a peace was purchaſed of them at the expence of 10,000l.; notwithſtanding which, in nine years after they plundered the town again: a caſtle was built here ſoon after the Norman conqueſt, which was pulled down by king Stephen, and no veſtiges are now remaining. The principal trade for the ſhipping of this port, is the Greenland whale fiſhery, for which it is well ſituated, as the ſame wind which conveys the ſhips out of the river will ſerve them for the whole voyage. Great quantities of corn are ſent from hence to London, and timber conveyed to the different dock-yards. The tide riſes to the height of twelve feet, but the harbour is almoſt dry at low-water: veſſels of large ſize are obliged to ſtop below the town. Ipſwich is the county town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. Here is a market on Tueſday and Thurſday for butchers' meat, on Wedneſday and Friday for fiſh, and on Saturday for corn and proviſions in general: 42 miles S. Norwich, and 69 NNE. IRABATTY, a name given to the river Ava, in ſome part of its courſe.

IRAC (Arabian), a country of Arabia Deſerta, ſituated to the ſouth of the Tigris and Euphrates; towards the north-eaſt it is watered by the branches of the Euphrates, and is fertile, with a number of cities and towns; towards the ſouth-weſt, it is a dreary wilderneſs. Baſſora is one of the principal places.

IRAG, or Irac Agemi, a province of Perſia, bounded on the north by Ghilan and Mezanderan, on the Eaſt by Choraſan, on the ſouth by Farſiſtan, and on the weſt by the Arabian Irac. This province contains a part of ancient Media and Parthia. It is about 150 leagues in length, and 120 in breadth: a part of it is compoſed of barren and naked mountains, or ſandy plains, in which little can grow for the ſervice of man. The air is healthy, but extremely dry; the climate is hot, and it hardly ever rains in the ſummer for ſix months together: near the rivers are vaſt and fertile plains; elſewhere the country is barren. Muſk is obtained from an animal found on Mount Taurus, which croſſes the province: and in ſeveral places manna is collected of exquiſite whiteneſs. Galbanum is collected in the mountains, a few leagues from Iſpahan, and in ſeveral places they cultivate grapes, part of which are dried, and the reſt made into white wine. They reckon about forty towns or cities. Iſpahan is the capital.

IREBY, or Market Ireby, a town of England, in the county of Cumberland, on the river Elne, with a weekly market on Thurſday: 12 miles N. Keſwick, and 296 N. London.

IRELAND, an iſland lying to the weſt of that of Great Britain. It is bounded on the eaſt by St. George's Channel and the Iriſh Sea, which ſeparates it from England and Wales; on the north-eaſt by a channel about twelve miles broad, which ſeparates it from Scotland; and on the weſt by the Great Atlantic Ocean, to which it opens its numerous and capacious harbours, as if it offered to embrace the whole commerce of the Weſtern World. It is ſituated twenty-one leagues weſt of Holyhead, and north-weſt of Portpatrick, in Scotland, about four. This beautiful iſland is ſituated between Long. 6. 0. and 10. 40. W. and between Lat. 51. 15. and 55. 13. N. being about 289 Iriſh miles in length, and 155 in breadth; or 350 Engliſh miles long, and 189 broad. It is divided into four provinces, viz. Ulſter on the north; Munſter on the ſouth; Leinſter on the eaſt, and Connaught on the weſt; which four provinces are divided into thirty-two counties, which include 2293 pariſhes, on a ſurface of about

19,000 ſquare miles, Iriſh. Its population is uncertain, and calculations vary in their eſtimates, from two millions and a half, to upwards of four millions: perhaps a medium may be ſtruck, and after allowing for ſome depopulation, owing to the numbers that have fallen in the late civil war, the tranſportations, and executions, and enliſtings into regiments on foreign ſervice, the whole population of Ireland may be taken at about three millions and a half; four-fifths of whom are Roman Catholics, and the remaining fifth of the Anglican or eſtabliſhed church. This eſtabliſhment, conſiſting of 3000 eccleſiaſtics, is ſupported by an annual revenue of upwards of ſix hundred thouſand pounds. The number of the Roman Catholic clergy is 25,000, maintained by the voluntary contributions of their own flock, that pay, however, equal dues to the Anglican church. Beſides theſe, the diſſenting clergy of Ulſter, in aid of the bounty of their own congregation, are allowed by the government 2700l. per annum. The vaſt revenues of the eſtabliſhed church add great weight and great ſplendour to the ſtate, which in return receives back from the church the ſupport it gave. This ſtupendous eſtabliſhment is protected by four archbiſhops, and twenty biſhops, whoſe influence and patronage form a part of the government. The climate of Ireland is extremely temperate, not being ſubject to thoſe exceſſive heats and colds, and their viciſſitudes, to which that of England is expoſed, the warmth of its ſummers being neither ſo intenſe, nor the rigours of its winters ſo ſevere: ſo that two Iriſhmen, when they meet, ſeldom ſalutes with telling one another, as they do in England, that " it is a warm day," or " a cold day:" the weather being leſs changeable, their diſpoſitions are leſs fluctuating: more hoſpitable, and certain in their affections, their ſalutations take another turn; and their bodies not feeling like thoſe of the Engliſh, their ſenſations are expreſſed more from the heart. This country is ſeldom viſited by any of thoſe dreadful convulſions of nature, that diſturb and often deſtroy other parts of the world; and it is remarkable, that ſuch is the excellence of its ſoil and climate, that no venomous animal will live in it. Owing to the number of moiſt particles that are wafted from the ocean by the weſterly winds, which for the moſt part prevail, the atmoſphere is much damper than that of England, but not at all unhealthy: the natives are as hardy as any people in the world, and the air not found unfavourable to ſtrangers. Although the bogs in this country are very numerous, it does not appear that they are unwholſome, partaking in no degree of the marſhes and fens in ſome parts of England, which in that kingdom are found productive of agues and other nervous diſorders. Indeed the bogs do not emit any putrid vapours, but are of an antiſeptic and aſtringent nature, being found not only to preſerve timber for ages, but to render it more durable. The ſkins of different animals, particularly thoſe of ſtags, and even of men that have periſhed in ſome of thoſe bogs, have been found converted into a ſort of tough and ſtrong leather, though buried for centuries in the bottom of the bogs. The ſoil of Ireland varies extremely in different places, changing from the ſtiffeſt clay to the lighteſt ſand, but of the latter there is not much to be found, and chalk is no where met with. Though far more ſtony than that of England, the ſoil is naturally more productive, notwithſtanding the high cultivation of the latter country: the lime-ſtone, of which the Iriſh rocks principally conſiſt, contributing to warm, enrich, and improve the land. The paſturage altogether is prodigiouſly luxuriant; but agriculture there has not yet received all the encouragement it might, nor all the advantages of which the ſoil is capable. The bogs, when drained, make excellent meadow, and are found well adapted to the culture of potatoes. Marble of great beauty and luſtre may be found in many of the counties, particularly in Kilkenny. Copious mines of the fineſt coal, which it is hoped will be opened, particularly as the country is interſected by numerous canals, are to be met with in ſeveral places: and mines of ſilver and lead, and of ſilver mixed with lead, and iron, and copper, are not unfrequent: potter's clay alſo has been found of excellent quality, ſuppoſed ſuperior to any of that ſort in England. A moſt rich and pure mine of gold was lately diſcovered in the county of Wicklow, but at preſent is not allowed to be worked, a guard being conſtantly employed to watch it. Yet with all theſe advantages, and few nations have been ſo highly gifted by nature, the face of Ireland, amid its pictureſque and ſmiling appearance, exhibits a wretchedneſs that draws a ſigh from the moſt indifferent ſpectator, where the cave of miſery and the half-naked native at once offend and ſhock the feelings of humanity, as if both the ſoil and its people were the property of the Rich Few, that would ſuffer nothing to thrive or to flouriſh but themſelves. This wretchedneſs may in ſome meaſure be attributed to the inteſtine feuds that had ſo long diſtracted the people, and are ſtill politically kept up, between the Britiſh and the Native, rankling in the ſeparate intereſts of the Proteſtant and the Catholic, ſo ſubverſive of all morality and good government; but eſpecially to the circumſtance of injurious and oppreſſive tithes, that ſubject four-fifths of the huſbandry of the country to annual impoſts of immenſe amount, that have formed an inſuperable barrier to proſperity, becauſe a penalty on labour and induſtry, and that penalty levied on the people in ſupport of the religion to which they have not conformed, and which, under the faction that oppreſſes them, they will not eaſily be induced to embrace. The principal rivers in Ireland are the Shannon, Foyle, Bann, Liffey, Slaney, Suir, Barrow, Erne, and Moy. Its ſea-ports are numerous, and its harbours the fineſt in the world: in that of Cork alone all the ſhips in Europe, it is ſaid, might ride ſecurely at anchor. The principal ſea-ports are, Londonderry, in the north: Belfaſt, Dublin, Dundalk, Drogheda, and Wexford, on the eaſt-coaſt: Cork, Waterford, Kinſale, Youghal, and Dungarvan, on the ſouth: Galway, Sligo, and Limerick, on the weſt. The ſtaple manufacture of Ireland is linen cloth, which, ſuch is the induſtry of the people when they are encouraged, has been brought to the higheſt perfection: and ſuch is their natural genius, that within theſe few years the cotton manufacture has been cultivated with the happieſt ſucceſs, ſo as to imitate the dimities, muſlins, and other fabrics of India. But their own manufactures being unprotected, while their ports are held open to thoſe of Great Britain, their internal trade ſuffers unſpeakable diſadvantages, the cloths, ſilks, cottons, hoſiery, hard ware, hats and jewelry of England, pouring in upon them, ſo as to render hopeleſs every national exertion of their own. The exports of Ireland are butter, an article for which the ſoil of this fertile country is peculiarly adapted, ſalted proviſions, hides, tallow, ſoap, candles, corn, linen and woollen yarn. In return for theſe, ſhe receives timber, wines, fruits, teas, ſugars, tobacco. By ſome hiſtorians Ireland is ſuppoſed to have been peopled from Spain; but from many circumſtances they appear to have had the ſame origin in common with their neighbours, and that this country was firſt peopled from Scythia: ſo that to look for their antiquity in the nearer periods of European hiſtory, will but diſtract the enquirer, and diſappoint his reſearches. It does not however appear that the hiſtory of Ireland, until the coming of Henry the ſecond, was " fabulous," as ſome writers pretend: certain it is, that its hiſtory may be traced with equal authenticity through the channel of the very ſame materials that other nations trace theirs, and that for ſeveral centuries preceding the birth of Chriſt, Ireland had arts and polity, when England poſſeſſed neither. Long before the arrival of St. Patrick in the fifth century, the Chriſtian religion had been received in Ireland: that good man but eſtabliſhed and confirmed the goſpel that had been introduced before. The Iriſh had experienced frequent invaſions, particularly from the Danes, who in the eighth century, made ſome formidable inroads there, as they did in England, forming a ſettlement in both countries. In the twelfth century, it was again invaded by Henry the Second of England, being governed at that time by five kings of their own; that is, by four kings that ſhared the four provinces, who were all tributary to the king of Meath. John, the ſon of Henry, was created Lord of Ireland, and Henry gave him the country. Soon after he had taken the government upon him, John gave a new code of laws to the kingdom: after him it continued to be governed as a Lordſhip by the kings of England, till Henry the Eighth firſt aſſumed by act of Parliament the title of King of Ireland. Ireland at preſent is governed by a Viceroy that repreſents the king of England, and a Parliament conſiſting of Lords and Commons, like that of England, and poſſeſſing the ſame privileges, but is entirely uncontrouled by Great Brttain, having in the year 1782 aſſerted her independence. In this kingdom are two univerſities, one founded by Queen Elizabeth in the 16th century, and expreſsly in aid of the Proteſtant religion; the other founded of late years for the education of Roman Catholics. The Iriſh language is extremely ancient, and may be traced in many of its words, and termination of words, to its Scythian origin. It is more expreſſive than any other known language, and perhaps amid all the incurſions of their neighbours, and the revolutions their kingdom has ſuffered, the jealouſy entertained by the natives againſt the ſpoilers and pillagers of their land may have had no ſmall ſhare in contributing to preſerve their language in ſo much of its original purity. No people love their country ſo well, or are ſo zealouſly attached to one another: among the ancient ſtock the Iriſh is almoſt the only language that is ſpoken, for with their affections they have retained their language with little alteration. One ſingle word will often expreſs the circumlocution of commercial innovation, while its pathos melts the heart, or ſtrikes it with the moſt impreſſive ſublimity. With the conciſeneſs and clearneſs of their language, it is needleſs to ſay that the natives of Ireland are the ſhrewdeſt and wittieſt people on the earth. They carry their hearts on their lips; and as their minds have not yet been debauched by luxury, the inartificial warmth of their tempers is prompt to reſent the injuries they have not provoked. An Iriſhman is ſeldom known to give the firſt offence; and when offended, will forgive upon atonement with the ſame frankneſs, and the ſame ſincerity too, that he reſents. The characteriſtic of the Iriſh is that of valour inflamed by a high ſenſe of honour, which they ſometimes find inconvenient to them in other countries, but is no burthen at home. The men of Ireland make the beſt huſbands, and the women the beſt wives: what poetry had imagined of another nation, the hiſtorian may faithfully record of Ireland, that " her ſons are brave, and her daughters chaſte."

ISNY, or Yiſn, an imperial town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia. The free imperial town of Yſni, or Iſny, lies in the Algau, betwixt the counties of Hoheneck, and Trauchburg, and the lordſhip of Eglof. Its magiſtracy, and the greateſt part of the citizens, are Lutherans. Here is an abby of Benedictine monks, of which the noble family of the Treuchſeſſes are adminiſtrators and patrons, the whole city, indeed, formerly belonging to them. But the latter, in 1365, redeeming itſelf for 9000 lb. weight of hellers, it was, by the emperor Charles IV. taken into the immediate protection of the empire, with all the rights, immunities, and uſages of the imperial towns. Its taxation to the matricula of the empire and diet was, in 1683, reduced from eighty to forty florins. In 1692, it was farther reduced to thirty, and afterwards to ſixteen; but in 1728, raiſed again to thirty-eight florins. To the imperial chamber of Wetzlar it pays thirty-three rixdollars, ſeventy-five kruitzers. Ever ſince the year 1514, Yſni has been the tribunal ſeat of Leutkirck. In 1631, a great part of it was conſumed by fire, and, in 1721, it ſuffered extremely by the like calamity: 40 miles S. Ulm, and 20 NE. Lindau. Long. 27. 42. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 43. N.

ISPAHAN, a city of Perſia, and capital of the whole country, ſituated on the river Zenderoud, in the province of Irac, ſurrounded by a wall and ditch, and defended by a caſtle. The walls are built of mud, and are about 20,000 paces in compaſs; but kept in no repair, and ſo hidden by the adjoining houſes and gardens, that they cut no figure, and are hardly to be diſcovered. The beauty of the city conſiſts chiefly in a great number of ſumptuous palaces, handſome and airy houſes, ſpacious caravanſeras, very beautiful bazars, many canals, and ſtreets planted on both ſides with lofty plane-trees; though, generally ſpeaking, the other ſtreets are narrow, crooked, and not paved: but the air being very dry here, and every houſekeeper cauſing the ſtreet to be watered before the door twice a day, there is neither ſo much dirt nor duſt as in many great cities in Europe. The Meidan Shah, or Royal Square, is one of the fineſt in the world. It is 440 paces long, and 160 broad, and is ſurrounded by a canal, built with bricks, cemented with a black mortar, which, in time, becomes harder than free ſtone. The royal moſque is at the ſouth end of this ſquare, and its portico is wonderfully adorned with a thouſand figures, and an inconceivable profuſion of gold and azure, the whole being alſo inlaid with enamelled ſquares, and a frize round it of the ſame materials. Few ſtructures can equal the magnificence of this, many of its pieces and decorations being wrought in a manner unknown to our European architects. The ſame may be ſaid of the royal palace, and the haram, or women's apartment. The palace is certainly one of the moſt ſpacious in the world, being near a league and a half in compaſs. Its great portico ſtands in the royal ſquare, and is all built with porphyry, and very high. The Perſians revere it as ſacred. The ſuburbs of Iſpahan are very large, and chiefly inhabited by Armenians. There are beſides 1460 villages round about Iſpahan, and the inhabitants live chiefly upon the manufacturing of ſilk and wool. Long. 69. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 33. N.

ISTRIA, a peninſula of Europe, bounded on all ſides by the ſea, except towards the north, where it is joined to Carniola. It was anciently a part of Illyrium; but being conquered by the Romans, between the firſt and ſecond Punic wars, was annexed to Italy. In the middle ages it belonged to the patriarch of Aquileia, who was inveſted with it as a marquiſate, by the emperor Henry IV. In the year 1190, moſt of the maritime part was conquered by the republic of Venice, though not without ſome interruption from the Auſtrians. It is fruitful, eſpecially in wine and oil, but hilly, and the air unhealthy. Capo d'Iſtria is the capital. That part of Iſtria which belongs to Auſtria, has been greatly improved by the emperor Charles VI. who viſited the country in perſon, in the year 1728. He eſtabliſhed a Levant Company, made good roads for the ſake of conveying merchandiſe to Vienna and Carlſtadt, in Croatia; built a lazaretto at St. Veit; made Trieſte a free port. Joſeph ſeconded theſe endeavours, and by perſeverance and a continuance of peace, Iſtria would moſt probably have become a commercial country.

ITALY, a country of Europe, bounded on the north by Swiſſerland and Germany, on the eaſt by Carniola and the Adriatic, on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt by the Mediterranean, and on the weſt and towards the north by France; extending, from the Lake of Geneva, to the ſouthern extremity of Calabria, about 700 miles. The breadth is very unequal; towards the north, meaſuring from France to Carniola, the diſtance is about 300 miles: from Leghorn to Ancona 135, and from Naples to Termoli 75. Its form has been compared to a boot, the province of Otranto repreſenting the heel, and Calabria the toe of the foot. The moſt conſiderable mountains of Italy, are the Alps and the Apennines; the principal rivers are the Po, Adige, Arno, and Tiber. The air, climate, and productions vary in different parts, and are generally noticed in the reſpective accounts of each. The plains of Lombardy are juſtly ſtyled the garden of Europe, as well on account of their fertility, as the ſerenity and pleaſantneſs of the climate; in the dominions of the church, and in the kingdom of Naples, the heat in ſummer is exceſſive, to which, however, they are indebted for the richeſt fruits, and the moſt odoriferous flowers, as well as oil, wine, and ſilk, and other valuable commodities. There are few countries in the world better watered than this, in reſpect to ſprings, rivulets, ſmall and great lakes, as well as large rivers. Thus bountifully dealt with by nature, it has alſo, from the ingenuity and application of its inhabitants, been eſteemed the mother of arts and commerce, in reſpect to the reſt of Europe; its reputation is ſtill ſo high with regard to the firſt, that the tour of Italy is conſidered as the neceſſary concluſion of a polite education; and in reference to the latter, though the trade of Italy is now nothing to what it was, yet the ports of Genoa, Leghorn, Naples and Venice, to ſay nothing of thoſe in Sicily, make ſtill a very great figure; and derive great advantages to the ſovereigns in whoſe dominions they are ſituated. Beſides all this, the ſeveral countries of Italy have ſuch funds of natural riches, and the people are ſo happy at improving as well as inventing manufactures, that they ſtand in need only of ſome favourable juncture to revive their ancient ſpirit, and to make as great a figure as their anceſtors did, in compariſon with other nations. This great and fruitful country of Italy has been, high as hiſtory records, either the ſeat of empire, or the theatre of war. It was then in the ſame ſituation that it now is, cantoned out into various little ſtates and republics, all living in diſtruſt, at leaſt, if not in war with each other. The Roman common-wealth changed the face of things, by ſwallowing up all, and making herſelf the head and miſtreſs of Italy. The diviſion of her empire proved the ruin of it, and the provinces adjacent to Italy being loſt, the barbarous nations that conquered them, very ſoon became maſters even of the imperial city of Rome, and divided Italy once more into ſeparate principalities: all of which have been extremely ſubject to revolutions, ſometimes from the ſuperior power of foreign invaders, and often from the effects of inteſtine commotions; ſo that no hiſtory is fuller of events, and, conſequently, more capable of gratifying curioſity, and fixing attention, than that of this country. There is no kind of government ſubſiſting in any part of Europe, of which ſomething of the like is not to be met with in Italy. As to the ſovereignty of the pope, it is peculiar to this country, being veſted in a ſpiritual perſon, and yet altogether a temporal power, exerciſed as abſolutely, and, as is generally ſuppoſed, with more policy than in any other monarchy. The dominions of thoſe two crowned heads (for yet there are no more) that lie within its limits, are thoſe of his Sardinian majeſty at one end, and of the king of Naples or the Two Sicilies at the other. The duchy of Milan, once the largeſt and richeſt in this part of the world, together with the duchy of Mantua, and its dependencies, belong to the houſe of Auſtria. His imperial majeſty is conſidered as one of the Italian powers, not only in that capacity in which he claims a title, paramount to the greateſt part if not the whole, but particularly alſo as grand-duke of Tuſcany. The duke of Parma, is in poſſeſſion of a ſettlement, compoſed not only of that duchy and of Placentia, which was the patrimony of his anceſtors by the mothers' ſide, but likewiſe of Guaſtalla. The duke of Modena holds that duchy and Reggio, together with the duchy of Mirandola; and beſides theſe there are ſome other leſſer princes, who are ſtyled ſovereigns. The republic of Venice is an unmixed ariſtocracy; ſtill venerable for the wiſdom of its government, as heretofore formidable by the extent of its dominions, as well as great naval force. The republic of Genoa is an ariſtocracy alſo, but not quite ſo pure as that of Venice. There are beſides theſe two free ſtates, the dominions of which are ſurrounded by thoſe of ſovereign princes, to whom notwithſtanding they owe no obedience, or even homage; the firſt of which is the commonwealth of Lucca, in the neighbourhood of Tuſcany, and the latter the republic of St. Marino, in the midſt of the pope's territories. Such is the diſtribution of power in Italy; and in ſupporting this diſtribution, and in maintaining each of theſe princes and ſtates in their reſpective rights, ſo as to prevent their encroaching upon each other, or being overborne by a foreign force, conſiſts the preſervation of the balance of Italy. The principal countries or ſtates of Italy are Piedmont, Savoy, Genoa, the Milaneſe, Mantua, eſtates of Venice, Parma, Modena, Tuſcany, Naples, ſtates of the church or the dominions of the pope, the ſmall republics of Lucca and St. Marino, the principality of Monaco, &c. with the iſlands of Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, and ſome other, all which are treated of under their reſpective heads.

ITUERO, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon: 13 miles SSW. Civdad Rodrigo.

ITZEHOA, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Holſtein. The town derives its origin from an order iſſued in 809, by the emperor Charles the Great, to count Egbert, that on the Stor, at a place called Eſſesfeld, he ſhould build a town and fortreſs againſt the Danes. This fortreſs afterwards obtained the name of Eſſeho or Etzehoe, which in the fourteenth century was changed into that of Itzehoe. In the year 1200, the burg, and no ſmall part of the adjoining place, was deſtroyed; but the latter was rebuilt, and for its greater ſtrength ſurrounded by water, a wide canal being drawn to it from the Stor. In 1238, count Adolphus IV. erected it into a town, conferring on it Lubeck rights; and in 1260, the counts John and Gerhard made it a ſtaple, ſo that all ſhips coming up the Stor out of the Elbe and from Wilſter are to unlade here, and offer their goods to ſale, and not proceed farther upwards without the permiſſion of the magiſtracy. On account of the above mentioned rebuilding of this place, all that part of the town environed by the Stor, is called New Town, though in reality more ancient than that named the Old, which did not obtain municipal rights till 1303, though part of it eſcaped the deſtruction of the year 1200. The Old Town was indeed rebuilt at the end of the thirteenth, or the beginning of the fourteenth century, but in proceſs of time is fallen to decay, and its ſite annexed to the bailiwic of Steinburg. In 1643, Itzehoe was taken and fortified by the Swedes, but wreſted from them again in 1644. In 1657, however they reduced it entirely to aſhes: 8 miles NNE. Gluckſtadt, and 22 NNW. This duchy enjoys a fruitful ſoil, which produces all ſorts of corn in abundance, together with good meadow and paſture land. The breed of cattle here is conſiderable, and in particular it has a good breed of horſes, which are partly ſent to the neighbouring countries, and partly to France. Much woad alſo is cultivated here, and linen manufactured. Near Eſchweiler is found ſtone coal. In this country are twenty-ſix towns, and about eleven freedoms and boroughs. The provincial ſtates of Juliers bound themſelves, in the years 1628 and 1636, with thoſe of Berg, for the maintenance of their privileges; and theſe united Land-ſtates of Juliers and Berg conſiſt of the nobility of both countries, as alſo what are called the four head towns of each duchy; which in the duchy of Juliers are the towns of Juliers, Deuren, Munſter-Eyſſel, and Euſzkirchen; and in the duchy of Berg, the towns of Leneſs, Rattingen, Duſſeldorff, and Wipperfurt. Theſe aſſert that they depend not on the unlimited arbitrary will of their ſovereign, but were always governed according to their own, and their countries' freedoms, privileges, ancient uſages, cuſtoms, rights, and immunities, and at the land-diets not only deliberated, but even determined and decided, and were alſo to be conſulted on the moſt weighty matters. The common land-diets are held at Duſſeldorff. By virtue of the religious agreement, entered into on April 26th, 1672, at Colln on the Spree, as alſo on July 20th, 1673, at Duſſeldorff, between Frederic William, elector of Brandenburg, and the palatine Philip William; thoſe of the Augſburg confeſſion, as well Calviniſts as Lutherans, were to remain unmoleſted, and protected in the public exerciſe of their religion, their churches, chapels, ſchools, &c. which they held and enjoyed in the duchies of Juliers and Berg, at the time of entering into this agreement. In the tenth century, Juliers was governed by a count; in the year 1337, it was erected into a marggraviate, and in 1356, into a dukedom; after paſſing through the power of ſeveral families, it came, in the year 1742, by agreement, with the king of Pruſſia, together with Berg and Ravenſtein, to the houſe of Sulzbach, elector palatine. Neither Juliers nor Berg, have a voice in the college of princes. To the impoſts, however, Juliers is charged in the matricula 639 florins, 45 kruitzers; and Berg 284 florins, 4 kruitzers: both duchies together pay for each chamber term 676 rixdollars, $26\frac{1}{4}$ kruitzers.

The principal town, of the ſame name, is ſituated in the north part of the iſland with a harbour capaple of receiving veſſels only of a moderate ſize ; but the road has good anchorage, and affords a ſecure retreat for veſſels ſurprized by ſtorms or hurricanes : the ſituation is convenient for commerce. Near it is a mine of Loadſtone, but the pieces do not preſerve their virtue above four or five month. The iſland is fertile in rice, fruit, &c. Long. 98. 5. to 98. 30. E. JUNQUERE (La), a town of Spain, in the province of Catalonia : 30 miles N. Gerona.

IVORY COAST, a name given to a country of Africa, ſituated on the coaſt of the Atlantic, between cape Apollonia, and Cape Palmas, containing ſeveral towns, which are ſituated at the mouths of rivers called by the ſame name. The interior country is but little known, the natives refuſing the Europeans leave to build ſettlements, or even to trade amongſt them, except by means of the coaſt negroes, and even this with the moſt circumſpect caution. The chief commodities are gold, ivory, and ſlaves, the former in the greateſt plenty, but no regular tariff, or table, of the different proportions of each was ever ſettled. The inhabitants of this diſtrict have the reputation of being the moſt ſavage and barbarous on the whole coaſt ; and ſome writers ſcruple not to call them anthropophagi. Barbot adviſes mariners to touch with caution on this ſhore ; the natives, ſays he, bring on board ſome beautiful ivory, as a bait to draw the ſeamen on ſhore, and perhaps to devour them. This is the more probable, from their keeping their goods at ſo high a price, as will aſſuredly ever prevent Europeans from purchaſing them, although they aſk for every thing they ſee, and are greatly incenſed, if they meet with a refuſal. Their ſuſpicion and jealouſy are predominant qualities ; inſomuch, that, on the leaſt noiſe, they will precipatate themſelves headlong into the ſea, and ſwim to the canoes ; for many of them have been carried off by European traders. Whatever the Gold Coaſt produces, is alſo found here in greater abundance and perfection, and indeed, the fruits and vegetables of the warmer climates ſeem all to be united on the Ivory Coaſt.

IVOY, ſee Cerignan.

JURA, a mountain, or rather a long chain of mountains, which extend from the Rhine, near Bale, to the Rhône, about ten miles below Geneva ; ſometimes more ſometimes leſs elevated ; and in different places takes different names.

JURA, a department of France, bounded on the north by the department of the Upper Saône, on the eaſt by the department of the Doubs, and the canton of Bern, in Swiſſerland, on the ſouth by the department of the Aine, and on the weſt by the departments of the Saône and Loire and Côte-d'Or. Lons le Saunier is the capital.

JURA, an iſland in the North Sea, near the weſt coaſt of Scotland, about twenty-five miles in length, and from two to ſix in breadth : chiefly mountainous or barren heath ; however from the thinneſs of the population, there is generally bere and oats enough for the conſumption of the inhabitants, if not made into whiſkey ; as ſhell-fiſh and potatoes form the principal food of the poorer people. What are called The Paps of Jura, are three lofty mountains, of a conic form, of ſtupendous height. Some black cattle are raiſed, and about 300 or 400 ſold annually out of the iſland, and about 100 horſes : the wool is remarkable for its fineneſs ; but the ſheep are ſmall, and not numerous : goats are in greater plenty. Some wild deer are ſtill remaining, but the number is continually growing leſs. The number of inhabitants is ſaid ſcarcely to exceed 900, who all reſide on the eaſt ſide of the iſland : the weſtern part being too rugged for cultivation. There are two good harbours on the eaſt ſide of the iſland, but no veſſels above five or ſix tons belonging to them. The village of Jura is ſituated about the centre from north to ſouth, on the eaſt coaſt. Long. 2. 45. W. Edinburg. Lat. 55. 58. N.

IVREA, or Jurea, a city of Italy, in Piedmont, on the Doria Baltea, or Grand Doria, originally a Roman colony, ſent thither during the ſixth conſulſhip of Marius, and the firſt of Valerius Flaccus, and was called Eporedia. It is ſituated partly in a plain, and partly on a hill of eaſy aſcent : the number of inhabitants about 6000 : it is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Turin : the cathedral is ſaid to have been anciently a temple of Apollo. There are ſtill ſome remains of an ancient fortreſs, called il Caſtellazzo, ſuppoſed to have been built by Ardouin, firſt marquis of Ivrea, and afterwards king of Italy, againſt Henry, duke of Bavaria, his competitor for the crown. The emperors having granted the ſame, with the lordſhips of the town, to the comtes of Blanderate, the inhabitants, weary of the yoke, demoliſhed it, in the year 1205, and drove the comtes from the town. It was afterwards rebuilt, and came into the hands of the marquis of Montferrat, but the inhabitants were equally offended with him, and demoliſhed it a ſecond time ; at the ſame time paſſing an ordonnance, that the principal magiſtrate ſhould every year, on entering his office, be compelled to carry away one ſtone, and make a public declaration of his hatred to the marquis of Montferrat. It has a caſtle joining to the town, with four large towers, built by Amadeus VI. ſurnamed the Green Comte : it has two other fortreſſes, one built by the Spaniards, in the war between Charles V. and Francis I. king of France : the other built by Thomas, prince of Savoy, during the civil war in Piedmont. A third, named il Caſtelletto, was demoliſhed by the French, in 1641. Beſides the cathedral, it has three other pariſh churches, and ſeveral religious houſes. The marquiſate was founded by Charlemagne : 20 miles N. Turin, and 53 W. Milan. Long. 25. 24. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 12. N.

E. Ferro. Lat. 14. 18. N.

JUTLAND, a peninſula of Europe, in the kingdom of Denmark, formerly called Cimbria, and Cherſoneſus Cimbrica : it is bounded on the eaſt by the Scaggerak, the Little Belt, and the Baltic ; on the ſouth by the duchy of Holſtein; and on the weſt and north by the Northern Sea; about 200 miles in length, and 95 in breadth. It is generally divided into North Jutland, more eſpecially called Jutland, and South Jutland more generally called The Duchy of Sleſwick.

JUTLAND, or North Jutland, is bounded on all ſides by the ſea, except towards the ſouth, where it is bounded by the duchy of Sleſwick; it is about 150 miles in length, and from 60 to 80 in breadth; and of all the territories belonging to the crown of Denmark, it is the largeſt, and yields the greateſt revenue. The middle part of it, excepting a few ſpots of arable land, is nothing but heath and moors, which, however, afford good paſture for oxen, ſheep, and goats. But the other parts (which are of greater extent) are exceedingly fertile, as appears from the large quantity of all ſorts of grain annually exported from hence to Sweden, Norway, and Holland; and from the conſiderable ſums accruing to the inhabitants from the ſale of oxen, horſes, and hogs. Hence Jutland is commonly ſaid to be the land of bacon and rye bread. Here is alſo a great plenty of ſea and freſh water fiſh of all kinds. Jutland is every where interſperſed with hills and eminences, and, on the eaſt ſide, with fine woods of oak, beach, fir, &c. but the weſt ſide is not ſo woody; ſo that the inhabitants are obliged to uſe turf and heath for fuel: here is alſo great plenty of all kind of game. The air is ſomewhat keen and cold eſpecially towards the North Sea. The Jutlanders are of a robuſt, vigorous conſtitution, and reſolute temper; and ſeem to have raiſed themſelves to a ſtate of freedom, ſuperior to that of the other inhabitants of Denmark. Many of the Jutland peaſants have freeholds, for which they pay only a ſmall acknowledgment to the lord of the manor, and the public taxes. The Daniſh language is ſpoke with leſs purity and elegance in Jutland than in the other provinces; and the Jutlanders have alſo a particular accent. Fredericia is the only place where the exerciſe of any religion, beſides Lutheraniſm, is tolerated. North Jutland is now compoſed of four dioceſes, or general governments. Each of theſe has its biſhop and general governor; and they derive their name from the four chief cities, Aalborg, Wiborg, Aarhuus, and Ripen.

KAMSCHLOV, a town of Ruſſia, in the province of Ekaterinburg: 56 miles E. Ekaterinburg.

KAMTCHATKA, a peninſula of Ruſſia, in the government of Irkutſk, bounded on the north by the province of Ochotſk, on the eaſt and ſouth by the Northern Pacific Ocean, and on the weſt by the Sea of Ochotſk and the Penzinſkoe Gulf; about 600 miles in length, and from 30 to 200 in breadth. Captain King, who viſited it in the year 1779, gives a deſcription of the country, of which the following is an extract:—Its ſouthern extremity is cape Lopatka, a word ſignifying the blade bone of a man, and is ſo called from its ſuppoſed reſemblance to it. The ſhape of the whole peninſula is not unlike that of a ſhoe, widening from the toe (which we may ſuppoſe to be Cape Lopatka) toward the middle, and narrowing again toward the heel, a neck of land connecting it with the continent. A chain of high mountains ſtretches the whole length of the country, from north to ſouth, dividing it nearly into two equal parts, from whence a great number of rivers take their riſe, and empty themſelves on each ſide into the Pacific Ocan and the Sea of Ochotſk. The ſoil is barren with not the ſmalleſt ſpot of ground that reſembled what is called in England a good green turf; or that ſeemed as if it could be turned to any advantage either in the way of paſturage, or other mode of cultivation. The face of the country in general was thinly covered with ſtunted trees, having a bottom of moſs, mixed with low weak heath. The whole bore a more ſtriking reſemblance to Newfoundland, than to any other part of the world I had ever ſeen. It muſt however, be obſerved, that I ſaw at Paratounca three or four ſtacks of ſweet and very fine-looking hay; and Major Behm informed me that many parts of the peninſula, particularly the banks of the river Kamtchatka, and the Biſtraia, produce graſs of great height and ſtrength, which they cut twice in the ſummer; and that the hay is of a ſucculent quality, and particularly well adapted to the fattening of cattle. It is natural to ſuppoſe, that the ſeverity of the climate muſt be in due proportion to the general ſterility of the ſoil, of which it is probably the cauſe. The firſt time we ſaw this country was in the beginning of May, 1779, when the whole face of it was covered with ſnow, from ſix to eight feet deep. On the 15th of June, the thermometer had never riſen higher than 58°, nor the barometer than 30°. 4″. The winds blew almoſt invariably from the eaſtward during our ſtay, and the ſouth-eaſt was more prevalent than any other. On our return, the 24th of Auguſt, the foliage of the trees, and all other ſorts of vegetation, ſeemed to be in the utmoſt ſtate of perfection. For the remainder of this month and through September, the weather was very changeable, but in no reſpect ſevere. But at the beginning of October, the tops of the hills were again covered with new fallen ſnow, the wind continuing weſterly. In computing the ſeaſons, the ſpring ought certainly not to be taken into the account. From the middle of June to the middle of September, may be properly ſaid to conſtitute the ſummer. October may be conſidered as an autumnal month; from thence, till the middle of June, it is perfect winter. This peninſula abounds in volcanos, of which only three for ſome time paſt have been ſubject to eruptions. The country is likewiſe ſaid to contain numerous ſprings of hot water. Of the trees which fell under our notice, the principal are the birch, the poplar, the alder (with the bark of which they ſtain their leather) many ſpecies of the willow, but all ſmall, and two ſorts of dwarfiſh pines or cedars. One of theſe grows upon the coaſt, creeping along the ground, and ſeldom exceeds two feet in height. It was of this ſort we made our eſſence for beer, and found it excellent for the purpoſe. The birch was by far the moſt common tree we ſaw; and of this we remarked three ſorts. Two of them fit for timber, and differing only in the texture and colour of the bark; the third of a dwarfiſh kind. Of the ſhrub kind, as juniper, the mountain-aſh, wild roſe-trees, and raſberry-buſhes, the country produces great abundance; together with a variety of berries; blue-berries, of two ſorts, round and oval, partridge-berries, cran-berries, crow-berries, and blackberries. Theſe the natives gather at proper ſeaſons, and preſerve by boiling them into a thick jam, without ſugar. They make no inconſiderable part of their winter proviſions, and are uſed as ſauce to their dried and ſalt fiſh; of which kind of food they are unqueſtionably excellent correctives. They likewiſe eat them by themſelves, in puddings, and various other ways, and make decoctions of them for their ordinary liquor. We met with ſeveral wholeſome vegetables in a wild ſtate, and in great quantities, ſuch as wild celery, angelica, chervil, garlic, and onions. Upon ſome few patches of ground, in the vallies, we found excellent turnips, and turnip-radiſhes. There are two plants, which, from the great uſe made of them, merit a particular mention. The firſt, called by the natives the ſaranne. The plant grows wild, and in conſiderable abundance: the women are employed in collecting the roots, which are of the bulbous kind, at the beginning of Auguſt, which are afterwards dried in the ſun, and then laid up for uſe. It is uſed in cookery in various ways. When roaſted on embers, it ſupplies the place of bread, better than any thing the country affords. After being baked in an oven, and pounded, it becomes an excellent ſubſtitute for flour and meal of every ſort, and in this form is mixed in all their ſoups, and moſt of their other diſhes. It is eſteemed extremely nouriſhing; has a pleaſant bitter taſte, and may be eaten every day without cloying. We uſed to boil theſe roots, and eat them as potatoes, either alone, or with our meat, and found them very wholeſome and pleaſant. The other plant alluded to, is called the ſweet graſs. This plant was formerly a principal ingredient in the cookery of moſt of the Kamtchadal's diſhes; but ſince the Ruſſians got poſſeſſion of the country, it has been almoſt entirely appropriated to the purpoſe of diſtillation. The liquor is of the ſtrength of brandy; and is called by the natives raka. Two pood (ſeventy-two pounds) of the plant yield generally one vedro (twenty-five pints) of raka. The nettle, as the country produces neither hemp nor flax, ſupplies the materials of which are made their fiſhing-nets; and without which they could not poſſibly ſubſiſt. For this purpoſe, they cut it down in Auguſt; and after hanging it up in bundles in the ſhade, under their balagans, the remainder of the ſummer, treat it like hemp. They then ſpin it into thread with their fingers, and twiſt it round a ſpindle, after which they twine ſeveral threads together, according to the different purpoſes for which it may be deſigned. Though there is little doubt but that many parts of this peninſula would admit of ſuch cultivation as might contribute conſiderably to the comfort of the inhabitants, yet its real riches muſt always conſiſt in the number of wild animals it produces; and no labour can ever be turned to ſo good account as what is employed upon their furreries. The animals, therefore, which ſupply theſe, come next to be conſidered; and theſe are, the common fox; the ſtoat, or ermine; the ſable; the arctic fox; the varying hare; the mountain rat, or earleſs marmot; the weaſel; the glutton, or wolverine; the argali, or wild ſheep; rein-deer; bears; wolves; dogs. The coaſt and bays of this country are frequented by almoſt every kind of northern ſea fowl; and amongſt the reſt are the ſea-eagles, but not, as at Oonalaſka, in great numbers. The rivers inland (if I may judge from what I ſaw in our journey to Bolcheretſk) are ſtored with numerous flocks of wild ducks of various ſpecies: in the woods through which we paſſed, were ſeen eagles of a prodigious ſize: this country likewiſe affords woodcocks, ſnipes, and two ſorts of grouſe, or moor game. Swans are alſo ſaid to be in great plenty. Fiſh may be conſidered as the ſtaple article of food with which Providence hath ſupplied the inhabitants of this peninſula; who, in general, muſt never expect to draw any conſiderable part of their ſuſtenance either from grain or cattle. The preſent inhabitants of Kamtchatka are of three ſorts. The natives, or Kamtchadales; the Ruſſians and Coſacks; and a mixture of theſe two by marriage. Mr. Steller, who reſided ſome time in this country, and ſeems to have taken great pains to gain information on this ſubject, is perſuaded, that the true Kamtchadales are a people of great antiquity, and have for many ages inhabited this peninſula; and that they are originally deſcended from the Mungalians, and not either from the Tonguſian Tartars, as ſome, or the Japaneſe, as others, have imagined. Volodimir Atlaſſoff, a Coſack, ſtands for the firſt acknowledged diſcoverer of Kamtchatka. This perſon was ſent, in the year 1697, from the fort Yakutſk, to the Anadirſk, in the quality of commiſſary, with inſtructions to call in the aſſiſtance of the Koriacs, with a view to the diſcovery of countries beyond their's, and to the ſubjecting them to a tribute. In 1699, he penetrated, with about ſixty Ruſſian ſoldiers, and the ſame number of Coſacks, into the heart of the peninſula, gained the Tigil, and from thence, levying a tribute in furs in his progreſs, croſſed over to the river Kamtchatka, on which he built the higher Kamtchatka oſtrog, called Verchnei, where he left a garriſon of 16 Coſacks, and returned to Yakutſk in 1700, with an immenſe quantity of rare and valuable tributary furs. The Ruſſian government eſtabliſhed over this country is mild and equitable, conſidered as a military one, in a very high degree. The natives are permitted to chooſe their own magiſtrates from among themſelves, in the way, and with the ſame powers, they had been ever uſed. One of theſe, under the title of toion, preſides over each oſtrog; is the referee in all differences; impoſes fines, and inflicts puniſhments for all crimes and miſdemeanors; referring to the governor of Kamtchatka ſuch only as he does not chooſe from their intricacy or heinouſneſs to decide upon himſelf. The toion has likewiſe the appointment of a civil officer, who is called a corporal, who aſſiſts him in the execution of his office, and in his abſence acts as his deputy. By an edict of the late empreſs, no crime whatſoever can be puniſhed with death. But we were informed, that in caſes of murder (of which there are very few) the puniſhment of the knout is adminiſtered with ſuch ſeverity, that the offender, for the moſt part, dies under it. The only tribute exacted (which can be conſidered as little more than an acknowledgment of the Ruſſian dominion over them) conſiſts, in ſome diſtricts, of a fox's ſkin, in others of a ſable's, and, in the Kurile Iſles, of a ſea otter's; but as this is much the moſt valuable, one ſkin ſerves to pay the tribute of ſeveral perſons. The toions collect the tribute in their reſpective diſtricts. Beſides the mildneſs of their government, the Ruſſians have a claim to every praiſe for the pains they have beſtowed, and which have been attended with great ſucceſs, in converting them to Chriſtianity, there remaining, at preſent, very few idolaters among them. The religion taught is that of the Greek Church. Schools are likewiſe eſtabliſhed in many of the oſtrogs, where the children of both the natives and Coſſacks are gratuitouſly inſtructed in the Ruſſian language. The commerce of this country, as far as concerns the exports, is entirely confined to furs, and carried on principally by a company of merchants, inſtituted by the empreſs. The articles of importation are principally European, but not confined to Ruſſian manufactures; many are Engliſh and Dutch; ſeveral likewiſe come from Siberia, Bukharia, the Calmucs, and China. They conſiſt of coarſe woollen and linen clothes, yarn ſtockings, bonnets, and gloves; thin Perſian ſilks, cottons, and pieces of nankeen, ſilk and cotton handkerchiefs, braſs coppers and pans, iron ſtoves, files, guns, powder and ſhot; hardware, ſuch as hatchets, bills, knives, ſciſſars, needles, looking-glaſſes, flour, ſugar, tanned hides, boots, &c. There are ſix veſſels (of forty to fifty tons burthen) employed by the empreſs between Ochotzk and Bolcheretſk; five of which are appropriated to the tranſporting of ſtores and proviſions from Ochotſk to Bolcheretſk; except that once in two or three years ſome of them go round to Awatſka, and the Kamtchatcka river; the ſixth is only uſed as a packet-boat, and always kept in readineſs, and properly equipped for conveying diſpatches. Long. 176. 48. to 180. 50. KAN-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Kiang-ſi. This is a city of great reſort ; it is ſituated on the river from which it has its name, although it receives another in this place, which they call Tchangho. Near the wall of Kan-tcheou, and where theſe two rivers unite, there is a bridge of boats, which are faſtened to one another with iron chains. One of theſe boats belonging to the bridge, is ſo contrived that they can open a paſſage to let the barks through. The juriſdiction of this city extends a great way, for it contains twelve towns of the third order ; its ſoil produces a great many of the trees from which varniſh diſtills, and this varniſh is reckoned the beſt in China : 840 miles S. Peking. Long. 132. 16. E. Ferro. Lat. 25. 52. N.

KAO-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Quang-tong, ſituated on a river, about 36 miles from the ſea. The tide flows and ebbs, as far as this town, ſo that the Chineſe barks go up to it ; the country is very fruitful. This city has within its diſtrict, one city of the ſecond order, and five of the third. This diſtrict is ſurrounded on one ſide by the ſea, and on the other by mountains ; there are a great number of peacocks, and ſeveral ſorts of birds of prey. There is alſo a kind of ſtone like marble, which naturally repreſents the fall of waters from the mountains, and landſcapes ; they cut it in leaves, and make tables, and other curious houſehold-goods of it. There is a kind of crayfiſh, like the common ſort ; but when they are out of the water they petrify, without loſing their natural form. The Chineſe phyſicians uſe them for a remedy againſt fevers : 1130 miles SSW. Peking. Long. 127. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 21. 40. N.

KEHL, a fortreſs of Germany, in the circle of Swabia. Formerly, when Straſburg was an imperial city, its bridge was defended by forts on both ſides the river. In the year 1678, the French laid ſiege to that on the German ſide of the Rhine, and which, from the village of Kehl, was called Fort Kehl. Having taken it by ſtorm, they razed it, thereupon the village of Kehl was removed, and a fort built at the conflux of the Kinzig into the Rhine, which is ſtill called Kehl. At the peace of Ryſwick, in the year 1697, this fort being ceded to the emperor and the empire, it was declared an imperial fortreſs. But the ground belonging to it the emperor conferred as a fief on the houſe of Baden-Baden, reſerving ſtill the right of placing a garriſon in it to the empire. Poſſeſſion of this place is of conſequence to the French in a war with Germany, for the ſake of tranſporting troops acroſs the Rhine, for which reaſon, at the commencement of hoſtilities, they have generally endeavoured to make themſelves maſters of it. In the year 1733, it was taken by the French. On the firſt of October, 1754, on account of its ruinous condition, the circle of Swabia withdrew a body of troops which were quartered there, on which the marggrave of Baden-Baden cauſed the garriſon to be replaced by his circular contingency; and referred to the empire what meaſures it would take with regard to the right of garriſoning, which had been reſerved to it: 1½ mile E. Straſburg.—This fortreſs was taken by the French, in June, 1796; retaken, after a long ſiege, and great loſs, by the Auſtrians, in September. The French took it again, by a coup de main, not long after.
